DEATH RECITAL OVERCOMES MOTHER

HOT WORDS PASSED ON NEW HAVEN

That New Haven "underground fund" was dragged up into the light again today in a hearing before the Public Service Commission; and the net results were a vigorous attack upon Louis D. Brandeis and Charles Sumner Bird by Clarance W. Barron; a hot controversy between H. W. Prescott, claiming to be a State House reporter for the Associated Press and the local manager of the organization; and an enlightening incident related by the editor of the Boston Journal, who told how a representative of the News Bureau warned him against printing certain testimony relating to New Haven matters.

The hearing started off in lively fashion when Arthur Dehon Hill discussed the possibility of calling Timothy E. Byrnes, former vice-president of the New Haven, to tell the railroad's side of the "underground fund" expenditures. Mr. Byrnes has been mentioned as "chief disburser" of this fund. But the road's attorneys said Mr. Byrnes is now visiting in California.

NEWS TO HILL.

"Why if I'd known he was going out of State, I certainly should have summoned him early in this investigation," said Attorney Hill. "I had no such notice."

The commission agreed to send an official letter to Byrnes asking him to return to Boston to testify, and another communication to Howard Elliott of the New Haven, asking that the directors meet soon and act on the question of allowing the officials to be examined by the commission.

Clarence W. Barron, the "farmer" editor and owner of the Boston News Bureau, took the stand to tell how $189,000 was expended for the New Haven advertising, through his agency. He was also asked why he sent out copies of his paper containing articles dealing with the New Haven. He replied hotly:

"I had lists of stockholders and investors. I sent out these articles, not to influence public opinion, but to disseminate the truth.

"I defy anyone to appear here, either editor, reporter, manager or publisher of my publication, and say that I ever placed $1 or tried to influence one line on the editorial or news pages of those publications."

CALLS MUCH UNTRUE.

"Much had been printed about the New Haven that wasn't true. The road was trying to keep afloat something like $1,000,000,000 in New England. The New Haven must regain confidence or its shares will be auctioned at twenty-five cents a share in the North End shops. The villainous nature of these attacks warranted a reply. Mr. Brandeis had been active

PATROLMAN C. W. MILLER, on trial on charge of manslaughter in case of Ralph P. Shea.

Miss Anne Morgan Drops from Fatigue

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 26.—Miss Anne Morgan, daughter of the late J. Pierpont Morgan was in a state of collapse from fatigue when she arrived here this morning to take part in the organization of the Missouri branch of the National Civic Federation. She was taken to the Hotel Jefferson. It was said at the hotel that Miss Morgan probably would recover sufficiently to carry out her original plans to hold the organization meeting late today.

Finds Bald Headed Woman in China

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Eight foot giants and bald-headed women were among the "finds" of Major F. M. Ashburn of the medical corps of the United States army, who reported today on the progress of his studies of tropical diseases in China. Two of the giants were normal, but one other had a voice of such depth that his whisper sounded like a bass drum.

MRS. SHEA WEEPS IN COURT

Two witnesses testified today at the trial of Patrolman Charles W. Miller for shooting Ralph P. Shea, that the policeman, at the time he fired the second shot, was partly in the doorway of No. 105 Warrenton street. Shea had fled into the doorway and fell dead inside, a bullet in his head.

During the testimony today when a witness said young Shea was beaten, Mrs. Shea, the dead man's mother wept, and was finally led from the room by her daughter.

Frederick L. Brondbent, formerly of No. 544 Tremont street, but now living in Brookline, was cross-examined when the case was resumed today. In reply to a question, he said:

"I saw the back of the patrolman's coat in the doorway of No. 105. That was when I heard the second shot."

Catherine Diggins, a girl about eighteen, who lived at No. 104 Warrenton street at the time of the shooting, said she was sitting at her window when the disturbance began. She told this story:

"Shea and Collins were singing near my house. I heard some one yell, 'Connie is pinched,' and I saw Shea and Collins run toward the corner. I saw them talking with the officer—then there was a struggle. I left the window, just as I heard a shot. When I got down to the door, I saw Patrolman Miller in front of No. 105. I heard two shots in all, and saw the flash of the second."

"How was he standing when he fired this second shot?"

"One foot was in the doorway and the other on the sidewalk."

Miller's counsel, John P. Feeney, then cross-examined. He laid the greatest stress upon the girl's version of the "bottle-throwing" incident. She said she heard the bottles thrown while she was in the house, and it sounded as if they were on Elliot street. She did not remember whether any bottles were thrown while Miller was there.

She was followed by Miss Edith Ryan of No. 20 Warrenton street, a girl of seventeen, but before Miss Ryan took the stand, Counsel Feeney asked that Miss Diggins' mother be subpoenaed to give her version of the event on the night of Shea's death.

HUSTLE TO RAISE $200,000

The great campaign to raise $200,000 or more in ten days for the new St. Elizabeth's Hospital at Brighton opened enthusiastically today.

At 12:30 o'clock this afternoon the fund stood officially at $36,511. On the line of thousands of workers for the charity fund everywhere in Greater Boston was the rallying cry of the campaign:

"Help the sick!"

"Two hundred thousand dollars in ten days" was another slogan. As the army of campaigners made the rounds of the city the fund, which had already reached $30,000 on Saturday night, swelled by leaps and bounds. It was declared that two Brookline churches had subscribed at yesterday's services $17,500 for the new hospital fund.

At 12:30 today the first registration was made on the big thermometer at Washington and Winter streets. The fund then stood at $36,511.

Those directing the big campaign were more than enthusiastic over the start today. They declared that without doubt the $200,000 figure would be reached, probably before the expiration of the ten-day limit.

Following Cardinal O'Connell's appeal came the big boost that the campaign received at Saturday night's gathering of more than 300 representative Catholic laymen of Boston. Then yesterday in the churches was read a letter from Cardinal O'Connell, recommending the fund as one of the most worthy charities to be aided in Boston.

This resulted in an unprecedented beginning for the campaign. Workers rallied from all over Greater Boston.

"L" DIVIDEND IS REDUCED TO FOUR PER CENT.

The directors of the Boston Elevated Railway Company declared a semi-annual dividend of 2 per cent, a reduction from a 6 per cent. to a 4 per cent. basis.

The 6 per cent. rate had been in effect since 1902. In 1901 5 per cent. was paid, and in 1900 4½ per cent.

In explanation of the dividend cut the following statement, signed by President Bancroft of the Elevated for the board of directors, is being sent to stockholders:

"The recent award of the board of arbitration, which substituted the question of wages and working conditions of the employes of the company, will increase the operating expenses by a substantial amount, and there will be no serious or financial burden in the immediate future that your board of directors does not wish to be restricted in declaring a dividend at the present time of over 2 per cent.

"It is hoped that this reduction will be temporary, and it should be impressed the public realizes that investment in public service corporations such as yours are entitled to a fair, just and reasonable return, and consequently does not in the future frown unfavorably on the company which it cannot afford."

RELATIVES BELIEVE SLAVERS HOLD YOUNG WOMAN A PRISONER

A reward of $100 for information that will solve the mystery of the disappearance of Eleanor Arlin, the Brookline girl who vanished January 8, was today offered by Reuben and Henry Gould, two uncles of the girl, who live in Colebrook, N. H.

SEARCH WOODS FOR GIRL.

MOST PEOPLE HONEST

Shown in Loan Concern Report

CHARACTER SECURITY

NEW YORK, Jan. 26.—That most people are honest is the contention of Julius J. Dukas, president of the Hebrew Free Loan Society of this city, in his annual report today. In the twenty-two years of its existence the society has lost less than one per cent. of money loaned on character as the only security.

Machinery— The Soul of Manufacturing

Yes, and the American's column headed "Machinery," over in the "Want Ad" section, is the heart of Boston's machinery market.

Here manufacturers find sellers of that which they need and buyers for the equipment they have outgrown.

The modern-day method for moving machinery is found in the American's "Want Ad" pages—the machinery market of Boston. Progressive manufacturing plants of today outgrow more machinery than they outwear—and have no place for the equipment. When a machine begins to lack capacity, no time is lost in finding an owner whom it can serve to advantage.

Bear this in mind, you who use machinery in your business. When you find that you are outgrowing some portion of your equipment, remember that there's a ready market for it. And this same market also will supply you with that which you require.

Simply describe in detail your want, or your offering, and leave with any of the American's "Want Ad" Stations, the branch office at 264 Washington street, Main Office 80 Summer street, or ful, and unscrupulous men would be sure to notice her on the street.

HINT MISS ARLIN MAY BE VICTIM OF MIND LAPSE

"She fainted frequently. Perhaps she was picked up by some of these men while in a faint and spirited away in an automobile before she regained consciousness.

"I hope the police will make a painstaking search of the underworld to see if they can find other cases of my niece's.

A significant discovery was made today in Colebrook, and one that may eventually shed some light on the girl's disappearance. It was learned that during her stay there last month her son Ernest, a coal dealer named Brown came up from Boston and visited at her home.

Since her disappearance January 8, three Colebrook people have received anonymous letters from the Brown's sister in Boston, asking if they can tell where the girl is.

It is not known where this "Brown" lives in Boston, nor whether he also is missing.

Another important fact was discovered in Colebrook. This was that the girl would go home on Saturday, January 10, for a short stay. It was on the eighth that she disappeared. Her writing home is taken as proof that she had no intention of committing suicide, for apparently she was planning a vacation and expected her life to go on as usual.

MOTHER PROSTRATED.

Mrs. Jane Arlin, the girl's mother, is at home in Colebrook, prostrated with grief for her daughter, and in a precarious condition. She is an elderly woman, and receives a pension of $12 a month, as her husband was a veteran.

Miss Arlin was accustomed to send her mother regular sums from her salary as stenographer for the Horace K. Turner Company of Newton Centre. With the girl's earnings cut off, the mother is dependent upon her relatives in Colebrook.

The girl's aunt, Mrs. Gould, declared that she believed the girl, perhaps while dazed and sick, was kidnaped by unscrupulous men and held a prisoner.

Mrs. Gould hurried here from Detroit at the first news of her niece's disappearance and left early today for Colebrook. There is a possibility that the girl lost her memory and started for her former home in New Hampshire in a subconscious state.

The girl's disappearance has stirred Brookline deeply. Automobile searching parties have visited all the local hospitals and morgues in Brookline and Boston, in a vain effort to locate the girl.

MAY OFFER REWARD.

The Brookline selectmen met this afternoon, and it was suggested they may offer a reward to encourage the search for her. At the same time a police "circular was being prepared for circulation through the country in an effort to locate the missing stenographer.

Miss Arlin was subject to headaches, and the most likely possibility seems to be that she was suddenly seized by such an attack on the day she disappeared and that either then she lost her memory and is wandering now, lost to all sense of her home and friends, or that in her stupefied state some accident resulted in her death—or that she was kidnaped.

She had a small amount of money in her possession when she left home, ostensibly to mail some letters. Inquiries made among her relatives and acquaintances fail to show that any letters from her reached them with a postmark as recent as the day of her disappearance. There is a mail box at no great distance from the girl's boarding place on Marion street, Brookline, and a postal station within two minutes' walk.

LANE OUTLINES GOVERNMENT RADIUM PLAN

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Hope for the 200,000 cancer sufferers in the United States was given in a remarkable statement by Secretary of the Interior Lane today before the House Mines and Mining Committee on the bill providing for the withdrawal of radium bearing lands in Colorado and Utah.

"We propose to retain these lands in order that the poor and rich alike in this country may have treatment for cancer at the earliest possible moment," said Secretary Lane.

"We have formulated a plan by which every prospector in the West will be encouraged to go out at once and discover and develop these uraniferous ores. We are going to provide favorable terms for development and in February there will be opened at Denver a laboratory where the process of making radium will be used by Doctors Kelly and Douglas of Baltimore. The moment that the first gram of radium is made by this process the process will be published to the world.

"We warn private monopoly reaching out for these lands. We saw the agents of European firms buying in Colorado trying to secure claims. We desire to prevent the exportation of these ores to Europe and to prevent the creation of a private monopoly which would charge 'hold up' prices due to control of the ore beds and possession of the secret process of manufacture."

Curtis After Seat of Senator Bristow

TOPEKA, Jan. 26.—Ex-Senator Charles Curtis will be a Republican candidate for re-election to the United States Senate. His announcement is expected soon. Along with it will come the assertion, it is said, that Senator Bristow and Arthur Capper have made a senatorial-gubernatorial deal designed to keep Curtis out of the primary contest. Senator Bristow is between two fires, and Curtis says he can easily defeat him in the August primaries.

Mrs. Belmont Gives $5,000 to War Chest

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont will oppose at the polls all Congressmen who do not vote for the suffrage amendment. She has given $5,000 to a war chest of $14,000.

HOLD ACCUSED 'RAFFLES'; BABY 'PAL' WONDERS

While August Kaufman, Boston's strange "literary raffler," was facing eight charges of burglary in the Municipal Court today, his tiny "pal"—five-year-old Elvina Merrill, daughter of his landlady—was crying as if her heart would break at her home at No. 257 Shawmut avenue.

The little girl is declared by Kaufman to have been his "only pal." She got pitifully when Kaufman failed to show up at the police court.

"Mama, where is Mithter August?" she questioned as she wept.

At the same time Kaufman, who is a much attached to little Elvina as she is to him, and to whom she refers as the "goodeth man," was brought into court before Judge Ely. There the police accused him not only of the attempt to secure $5,000 from the safe of the Rhodes Brothers provision store on Tremont street, but of seven other breaks in as many months in Boston.

Kaufman, who the police say confessed to two of the breaks, was put through the "third degree" test before being haled into court. Then came Inspector Hurley of the Cambridge police with the additional charge that he is guilty of a burglary in that city. These are the charges against the "gentleman burglar."

That he tried to blow the safe at Rhodes Brothers store.

That he had a burglar's kit in his possession;

That on July 4 last he blew the safe at Wirth's Cafe on Essex street and secured $700;

That on November 15 he "cracked" the outer door of the Wirth safe, but was scared off.

That since that time he has made the following breaks: Union Furniture Company, No. 19 Eliot street, $60 and twenty-four finger rings; Glass & Miller, No. 19 Eliot street, $700; Wolf Feeding Company, No. 25 Eliot street, $25; A. J. Epstein, No. 2 Harrison avenue, $10; Maurice J. Hamilton, No. 3 Harrison avenue, 10 boxes of sardines.

The police say Kaufman confessed the last two breaks.

Through his counsel, William H. Scharton, Kaufman waived examination. He was held in $10,000 for the grand jury. The Cambridge police wanted him for a break last October into the store of J. A. Holmes on Massachusetts avenue, in that city.

Lockout of Union Workmen in London

LONDON, Jan. 26.—The second week of London's labor troubles began today with a lockout of all the building trades workmen who refused to subscribe to the "open shop" system. All building operations were brought to a halt by the refusal of the masters to allow the union workmen to return to work.

Fifty thousand drivers and building trades workmen were late at the beginning of the day. The severe conditions arising from the fuel famine were alleviated by milder weather, but the price of coal was advanced. The army of soldiers and police who have been protecting strike-breakers in the fuel strike was split to prevent rioting among the building trades workers.

Cuts Out Stomach to Cure a Cancer

HARTFORD, Ct., Jan. 8.—A probable unprecedented operation, the removal of the stomach, is scheduled to be started the cure of the cancer which was killing Charles Johnson of this city, and at St. Francis Hospital today Dr. Daniel F. Sullivan, the surgeon who several times before performed unusual operations and who last Monday removed Johnson's stomach, all but the very bottom of it, was corroborated by house surgeons in his prediction that the patient would recover.

BARRON SCORES BRANDEIS ON THE NEW HAVEN

for seven years. Mr. Brandeis has a habit of taking cheats and using them—whether it is the Chamber of Commerce, the Fruit and Produce Exchange, or a private individual.

"When Mr. Brandeis was defeated, as for Mr. Hess and Mr. Prouty, and put before the people of New England during conditions of a villainous nature. If these false reports had gone unrepudiated, the public and the stockholders would be decieved. To answer him, I printed the truth in our columns.

"As a result of Mr. Brandeis' attacks, all chances of electrifying the New Haven from Boston to New York were ruined. Power houses, which had been purchased for just that purpose had to be disposed of under an agreement with the government, brought about by the request of Mr. Brandeis through the Attorney General of the United States.

"Yet I make the prediction now that it will be necessary for the New Haven subsequently to reclaim those power houses at an advanced price.

SAYS BLAME TO BRANDEIS.

"Building hotels at Bar Harbor and no Mount Washington was likewise stopped because the road was unable to get money. Mr. Brandeis has been the author of all the actions which have ruined the New England railroads. Mr. Bird has been back of this very inquiry, and the Boston Journal is also a factor.

"If it were not for Brandeis, the New Haven would today be paying and earning 8 per cent."

W. W. Prescott, a State House reporter, was then called to explain his association with the Associated Press. Manager Edward McKernon had denied he was their State House representative. Prescott explained that he telephoned the news to their central offices, where it was re-written. Prescott and McKernon became involved in a verbal controversy, and Whitfield Tuck accused Mr. McKernon of trying to shield the Associated Press at the expense of Mr. Prescott.

Then Walter Green of Weston, editor of the Boston Journal, was called. He was asked concerning Charles Sumner Bird's connection with the Journal. He said:

"Mr. Bird owns no stock, has no financial interest, and no indirect interest in the Journal or in this inquiry.

BRINGS UP LOANS.

"He has lent Matthew Hale money on personal, unsecured notes."

He related the events of April 12, 1913, as follows:

"I had a telephone conversation with a man who said he was Guy Bancroft of the News Bureau. He said that certain testimony had come out before Commissioner Prouty in the New Haven hearing that ought not to be printed.

"I asked him why not. He said if it were printed, it might give him a wrong impression—that he might get it inaccurate. I read him the account in the AMERICAN, and he said that was accurate, but that it was best not to print it.

"I refused him for an answer, and at last he said: 'You had better see your advertising man. He will explain. The Journal has always had its share of New Haven advertising [illegible] through us, and it will continue to get its share.'"

Shippers Protest Increase of Rates

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Scores of shippers and their lawyers prepared to protest against an increase of freight rates by the Eastern railroads were present here today at the first hearing of a series which will continue more than a month before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Headed by Louis D. Brandeis of Boston, who is counsel for the commission, the shippers' lawyers were prepared to present detailed evidence against the proposed increase. Today's hearing was devoted to shipments of perishable goods, with the exception of some of the greater classes, such as iron and steel. Before the end coal, every principal subject will have one day.

The fifty Eastern railroads were represented by a battery of lawyers prepared to bring out evidence to show that the 5 per cent increase, for which the railroads are asking, is necessary because of increased expenses.

THE TANGO IN TODAY'S NEWS

JAPAN NOW TANGOS—CRAZY.

NEW YORK, Jan. 26.—John L. Mott '56 and Mrs. Walter Bowne, the principals in an exciting around-the-world race two years ago, have introduced the tango in Japan and set Nippon dance crazy, according to Yamato Kashibhi, a leading theatrical producer of that country, who left New York today for San Francisco to prepare his exhibits for the Panama Exposition.

TANGO BAD, SAYS PRELATE.

ROME, Jan. 26.—Archbishop Marchi of Lucca in Rome out publicly against the tango. In an appeal to his communicants to spurn the tango he said: "I pray you to avoid that exotic symbol of unclealiness and lewdness which may well be named the fango.'" In Italian the word "fango" means "filth."

To Urge "Guilty, But Insane" Verdict

BUFFALO, N. Y., Jan. 26.—A committee of the New York Bar Association, at a meeting this month, will recommend the enactment of a law to provide that a jury in a murder case in which an insanity plea has been used as a defence, may return a verdict of "guilty, but insane." Persons thus convicted will be subject to terms of imprisonment at Matteawan equal to that provided for murder.

A statement today by Dr. Arthur W. Hurd, superintendent of the State Hospital for the Insane, refers pointedly to the Thaw case, and quotes the following from the proposed report: "No inquiry would be done to a sane man, who, after committing murder, has by the aid of deceived or purchased experts and dishonest counsel persuaded a jury that he was insane. He cannot complain if the law takes him at his word and sends him to keep company with those who are really insane."

Four Missing from the Fishing Fleet

Four Gloucester fishermen are believed today to have lost their lives in the gale which caught them unawares on the fishing banks last week. Fifteen men were separated from their ships by the sudden breaking of the blinding storm. But eleven have been accounted for.

The Pontiac, a Boston schooner in and out of T wharf, lost Charles Breason. The schooner Alice cannot account for two of her crew, and the Gloucester schooner Mesquita lost Joseph Mullin.

GINN LEAVES A MILLION FOR WORLD PEACE

A $1,000,000 bequest for peace education is contained in the will of the late Edwin Ginn of Winchester, founder of the World Peace Foundation in Boston.

The income of the money will be expended from the new home of the World Peace Foundation on Mt. Vernon street, Ginn's gift to the cause.

This large bequest, coupled with the monumental plans laid out by Mr. Ginn during the past few years, is believed by his Boston friends to make the most notable peace contribution of modern times.

The will gives directly $1,000,000 to peace education, the income to be administered by the trustees already chosen, and their successors. It is given without conditions, for Mr. Ginn has seen worked out by the trustees the plans formed by himself, and upon which he based his offer.

Since the time of the establishment of the Peace Foundation he has contributed yearly $50,000 as an annuity to furnish a fund for the activities of the peace campaign.

Peace literature is printed and distributed free of charge.

Strathcona Buried Beside His Wife

LONDON, Jan. 26.—Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal, late British High Commissioner for Canada, was buried today in Highgate Cemetery beside the body of his wife after impressive services in Westminster Abbey.

Simplicity marked the ceremonies, for it was the dying wish of the financier-statesman that his remains be interred without ostentation.

Among those present were representatives of King George and Queen Mary and American Ambassador W. H. Page.

The coffin rested upon a dais nearly hidden by flowers. Immense floral pieces sent in chest by a heavy squad of policemen, who exercised unusual vigilance for fear that militant suffragettes would attempt to make a scene.

Mistake in Name of Brett Company

The Brett Lumber Company of Lynn have made an assignment with liabilities at $300,000 and assets estimated at $137,000. Through an error the concern's name was printed Saturday as the Britt Lumber Company of Lynn, builders of pleasure yachts. Several old and built yachts, Britt firelleres, yacht builders, whose plant is near that of Brett Lumber Company, had absolutely no connection with the company making the assignment, and are in a thoroughly solvent condition.

EX-DEBUTANTE TELLS LIFE TO JANET WRIGHT

Janet Wright,
Boston American.

Dear Madam:

I take the liberty—and the pleasure—of writing to tell you about my past, as another girl did several days ago in our "Best Boston Paper, the AMERICAN."

I was brought up by grandparents in Washington, D. C., and with quite old-time ideas and ways that I never had a childhood. I was among a people all my life. Naturally, when I reached the age when youth loves pleasure, I craved what was denied me.

When I was still at a tender age my grandparents died, leaving me with an aunt who was austere, strict and with a temper like a "mad cat."

I made my debut in Washington society at eighteen. I have dined with the best known people of this land, from the White House down. What did it bring me? We will see later on.

In the midst of my youthful hopes and dreams I naturally craved the company of the younger set. I wished freedom, out-door life and sport. Anything but the eternal silks, satins, old maids and pink teas of my "society" life.

FROM A GILDED CAGE.

So there was a continual warfare between my aunt and me. At last, when I was seventy-one, she put me in the country to live with granddad No. 2. Life there was sweet and wonderful. I met and loved for the first time. And there I learned my awful lesson: I trusted Love—I lost. Lost both soul and lover. But it was the LAST temptation. My eyes opened and emanged from a child to a woman.

Twenty-one may seem rather old to begin life over, but it must be remembered what a caged bird I was—all in a gilded cage, too.

When, upon granddad's death I went to Washington, my aunt refused me admittance at my old home—though she herself was to blame for my fault.

There in Washington I found friends against me—none to help. My church refused me bread for my mouth and clothes for my back. A poor, sad creature I was. I could not work. I knew nothing.

From a bed of silk to a life of poverty was no joke! I starved and went cold, till at last a cousin helped me, after I had told her my story. She took pity, believed, and gave me a home. At her invitation and upon her example, my old friends came back, and in a few months I met and married.

I am happy here in your city of Boston, living quietly and away from the gay world called society.

Now in closing let me add two essential facts. First, this so-called society is far from being full of good morals and good teachings.

AUNT HOLDS ALOOF.

Do you know, dear Unknown Friend, that the daughter of one of our highest Washington officials gave me my first drink and smoke.

Now another fact. This aunt of mine still lives, still reigns over the smart set in Washington. She is one of its most prominent members, doing charitable work for which she receives praises due all of her kind. Daily I read of her work—and has she helped me?

No, not once. And I know her soul and heart is restless and miserable. For four long years she has never said a word to me. But it will come some day. God will grant my unceasing prayers.

I close, wishing you the best of success in your work. If all women were good and true as you, what wonders would occur.

"AN EX-DEBUTANTE."

IS CHILD CROSS, FEVERISH, SICK

Look, Mother! If tongue is coated, give "California Syrup of Figs."

Children love this "fruit laxative," and nothing else cleanses the tender stomach, liver and bowels as nicely.

A child simply will not stop playing to empty the bowels, and the result is they become tightly clogged with waste, liver gets sluggish, stomach sour, then your little one becomes cross, half-sick, feverish, don't eat, sleep or act naturally, breath is bad, system full of cold, has sore throat, stomach-ache or diarrhoea. Listen, Mother! See if tongue is coated, then give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the constipated waste, sour bile and undigested food passes out of the system, and you have a well, playful child again.

Millions of mothers give "California Syrup of Figs" because it is perfectly harmless; children love it, and it never fails to act on the stomach, liver and bowels.

Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly printed on the bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here. Get the genuine, made by "California Fig Syrup Company." Refuse any other kind with contempt.

CONSTANTINO NOW BARS EVEN VENUS DE MILO

As a burned child fears fire, so Florencio Constantino, the great tenor, fears women.

"Never again," declared Constantino, "will I listen to the siren voice of the female sex. I have been deluded, but I am not a fool. My benevolence almost cost me dear, and henceforth I shall regard the sex a non-existant.

"A jury has freed me from the charge of a woman who claimed I promised to marry her. I will run no more risks.

"Venus de Milo and Helen of Troy might come to me and plead for a few minutes' consideration, and I would refuse it except in the presence of a third party.

"When I sing in opera I shall turn my head away from the smiling face of the soprano or contralto. They are all alike.

"If a woman sends me a bouquet I shall regard it with suspicion. And yet before I was undeceived I was the favored of fair women. I hope the American people will not give women votes. Women are mercenary. If they had votes they would sell them. This is bad enough, but some men have been known to sell their votes. Women would sell their votes to both parties and then vote for a third.

"A man meets a woman. He sees that she has lovely eyes and lets her spend a fine figure. He loves her. A woman meets a man. She tries to find out how much money he has. She smiles on him, but she puts the smiles upon an expense bill.

"Tonight I sing 'Faust.' There is a story for you. As Faust, I sell my soul to the devil because I love a woman. And how do I gain her love, I ask you? I buy her. I present her with a casket of jewels. Do not waste sympathy for Marguerite in Faust. It served her right. Accept the word of Constantino."

Blames Dress for Cancer Liability

"I wish to urge people to avoid putting too much faith in radium as a cure for cancer," declared Dr. R. B. Greenough in a lecture at the Harvard Medical School. "It can alleviate pain and can destroy tissue," he continued, "but it can be used only in cancers that are fairly near the surface.

"Many cases of cancer are only discovered when the woman comes to a hospital for treatment for some other disease. It would not be a half bad idea if all women were rounded up occasionally for a searching medical examination, as are the men in the army. At the early stage an operation is as simple as any other local operation. The modern method of dress seems to provide every inducement to cancer in women."

WIFE AIDS WEBSTER IN HIS STRUGGLE TO RECOUP FORTUNE

Mrs. Walter A. Webster, the former Florence Mabel Gray of Atlantic, who has been the inspiration of her husband, the young lawyer, politician and financier, in Philadelphia, in his fight to retrieve his fallen fortunes

Mrs. Walter A. Webster is making a brave fight in Philadelphia, where her husband has been located following his disappearance in the Fall of 1911, when his financial obligations overwhelmed him, to help him recoup his fortunes. It is the dream of their lives, friends say, to regain their feet and return to Boston.

Mrs. Webster has been a source of comfort and inspiration in his reverses. She was Miss Florence Gray of Atlantic. She was a public stenographer at the Tremont Building. Webster, then an aspiring young Legislator, fell in love while dictating his speeches to her. They were married at the home of the bride's parents, April 25, 1907.

The young politician, lawyer, statistician and student of finance, who was first to propose a finance commission for Boston, is a voluntary exile from this city. The story of his being in Philadelphia was first printed in the Sunday AMERICAN and solved a big political mystery.

MRS. WEBSTER VISITS HERE.

Mrs. Webster has made visits to her parents' home in Atlantic and to friends in Boston, but so far as can be learned, Webster has not set foot in Boston since he fled from his creditors, according to the admission of legal and business associates. Mrs. Webster's last visit to Boston was made during the Christmas holidays.

In order not to be hindered and dunned by creditors, Webster has kept his present address a secret. Less than half a dozen relatives know where to send a letter to him. Mail that comes to him in Boston is forwarded. One attorney who corresponds with him has not confided the address even to his stenographer.

All this secrecy has added to the mystery. Every lawyer and politician who knew Webster calls it a "strange case." They are unanimous in the opinion that "Walter was too hopelessly involved to face his creditors and too proud to go into bankruptcy."

Webster, therefore, is a financial exile. He chose to go away and remain away. The oddest feature is that a man admitted to be an expert in finance and a student of economy, statistics and municipal government, was unable successfully to manage his own financial affairs.

Investigation of the Webster tangle leads to the records in the Poor Debtor, Municipal and Superior Courts, to the Bankruptcy Court, so far as his pet company is concerned, but not him personally, and to the books of almost every prominent money-lender in the city.

The Universal Carbon Company of which Webster was the prime spirit and president, was the ship that stranded. That and everything came together—suits and threatened suits by money lenders, an involuntary petition in bankruptcy against his mainstay, the brightest hope, the carbon factory at Ashland, Mass., and the clamor of a growing host of other creditors.

COMPANY DIRECTOR TALKS.

A. Ingham Bicknell, with an office on the ninth floor at No. 6 Beacon street, was a director of the bankrupt Universal Carbon Company. Mr. Bicknell said today:

"I deeply sympathize with Walter Webster and I think everybody else does. I don't think you can find anybody who doesn't wish him success in his effort to regain his feet.

"He had an avalanche of hard luck and lost his nerve. Everything tumbled upon him at once. I told him he ought to file a petition in bankruptcy, but he said he couldn't bear to do that."

CASTOR OIL IS A DIFFERENT THING, NOW

That Is, the Taste and Odor Have Been Removed

Kellogg's Tasteless Castor Oil Is the Best Laxative in 3000 Years

Spencer Kellogg & Sons of Buffalo, oil refiners, have succeeded in taking the offensive taste and smell out of castor oil.

The Kellogg's have done what chemists have tried to do and failed for 2,000 years.

Doctors recommend castor oil as the simplest, safest and best laxative. Every household will use it oftener, now that it is tasteless.

Kellogg's Tasteless Castor Oil is pure, clean, refined castor oil, and so entirely without taste that children like it easily.

This perfect laxative is now on sale in all drug stores. Order Kellogg's Tasteless Castor Oil by name, to distinguish it from various mixed and flavored castor oils, which are not tasteless. The trade-mark is on every label—a green castor leaf bearing the signature—Kellogg's. 25c and 50c sizes.

TANGO GOES IF DANCED RIGHT, 'HAPPY'S' EDICT

You can dance the tango at the "Happy Twenty" ball tomorrow night if you "dance it right."

So says "Happy" Rubinovitch himself, the head of the "Happy Twenty."

Question: "How to tango right?"

Echo answers: "Close!"

"Happy's" attention was called to the circumstances that in the Sunday AMERICAN, he had said the tango was "vernacular" at the dance.

Now he says the tango does no such thing as it is danced as it should be.

"Happy" perceives the swift switch in the rules but said easily:

"Oh, that's all right. It's a good story either way and it'll go at that."

"Happy" said he did not care how much was written about his dances and the tango.

The "Happy Twenty" dance will be danced in the Crescent Garden ball room at Revere Beach and there will be a special train and trolleys to bring you home in the early morning hours.

There will be no intermission, as such, at the "Happy Twenty" dance, but in the usual intermission period there will be a "Battle of Music" between H. Bernstein's Wellesley Military Orchestra and T. R. O'Connell's Waverly Orchestra.

Also there will be vaudeville, by Master Bessy Lavine (baritone), The Melodious Three, Nat. Clark, the Irving Berlin Serenaders, Bradley and Myers, Moulton and Driscoll, Chick Sterry Company and the Daley Trio.

Opera Stars at Sunday Concert

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

A concert of great attractiveness drew a large audience to the Boston Opera House last night. The principal singers were Boucher, the pronounced contralto; Ancona, soprano; Sammarco, Ramella, tenor, and Appezzo, tenor. The orchestra played the "Over Hyen Suite" and "The Ride of the Valkyrie."

Symphony Hall was filled yesterday afternoon for the joint concert of Julia Culp and Teresa Carreno, the beloved and ever brilliant pianist. The concert was very enjoyable.

Mail Orders Address—BOSTON AMERICAN, Boston, Mass.

A Modern Force in Business

Advertising has established a new order of things in commerce. It has become a mighty power in business progress —a complete yet comprehensible transmitter of many parts for the distribution and selling of merchandise and service.

Its function is five-fold:

To enlighten and educate—to create new wants and to satisfy old ones—to protect and foster legitimate enterprises—to establish a medium of understanding between buyer and seller as a basis for mutual profit and advantage—to fix an economical price and the maintenance of a standard of quality.

No one knows better than the buying public how well these functions have been fulfilled.

Modern advertising has given us an insight into various manufacturing processes. The producer has taken us—the consumers—into his confidence and told us just how his mince-meat, his flour and his clothing are made. We know why certain things should or should not be. Advertising has told us—broadened our understanding and guided our judgment.

Modern advertising has enabled us to unlock the treasure house of the world's divinest melodies through the medium of the talking machine and player-piano.

The motor car has lengthened the business day and brought the fragrant countryside to our door.

Men shave in comfort in ten minutes where they used to take twenty.

A magic bottle provides us with cold drinks with the weather at 100 degrees, or gives us a warm beverage when Jack Frost drops the temperature to zero.

Modern advertising has elevated business ethics. It protects the manufacturer from unscrupulous competition and the consumer from base imitation. It conserves trade—extends business—creates good will. It enables the corporation, the manufacturer or private individual on trial to take their cases directly to the public, and to secure the public's judgment on their policies or their characters based purely upon their respective merits.

Modern advertising has opened up new opportunities to the oppressed and poor of far-off lands.

It has turned an unceasing tide of immigration to new countries.

It has developed nations, and made the name of the new world a promise of better things among the people of the old.

All this advertising has done and will continue to do. It is the ever-increasing influence for the advancement of mankind—the most potent, indeed, of the many forces influencing human action.

And its potency is vastly increased by newspapers like the Boston American, which appeals to the reasoning minds of a great city's people.

Because of its comprehensive news service —because its every department is notably authoritative—because the great leaders of American thought contribute their best writings to its pages—

The Boston American is one of the fastest growing newspapers in Boston today. In fact, few other newspapers in America keep pace with the American's day-by-day advancement.

It has a circulation of nearly 400,000 copies daily. It is a newspaper which interests the head of the house, and the feminine portion of the family as well.

It goes into the home, and stays there.

That's why progressive advertisers find it profitable to be represented in its columns regularly.

A large space in which to carry needed articles on a tour is very convenient. A common wooden box as long as can be used on one running board, bolted on, with a slip cover of black rubber carriage top cloth, makes a good dust and rainproof receptacle in which to carry clothing and lunch boxes. It is free from the heat of the engine, easily reached, and will hold a generous amount. It may be fourteen inches square and as long as the running board will permit. The slip cover does not have to be fastened on, but should completely cover the box.

It is not the amount of gasoline that determines the amount of power to be derived from a given-sized cylinder. It is the amount that can be changed into a vapor and be mixed with air to a proper degree before ignition. In Winter much gasoline is wasted by being carried as liquid into the cylinders. Such material burns very slowly compared to the proper mixture, and leaves much of the carbon deposited in the combustion chambers. This is not economy

KING GEORGE HONORS MRS BATCHELDER

By ELIZABETH ELLIOTT.

The season for general flight to sunnier climes is on and among the first to take advantage of it are Mr. and Mrs. Eben D. Jordan and their petite, blonde-haired daughter, Miss Dorothy Jordan, who shortly start for California, where they will spend all of February and March.

* * *

Miss Jordan will return in time to get in line for the wonderful dances she will, as usual, give at the Vincent Club performance in April. The Jordans will be much interested at the opera, where the beautiful gowns of Mrs. Jordan and Miss Dorothy always attract so much admiring notice.

Boston is proud of the new honor bestowed upon Mrs. Tryphosa Bates Batchelder by royalty, she having had conferred upon her the Order of Mercy by King George of England. Mrs. Batchelder has only recently returned from abroad. This decoration is in recognition of her and its singing at concerts for the London hospitals and other work for the League of Mercy.

Mrs. Batchelder, the wife of Francis Batchelder, is the daughter of Mrs. Theodore C. Bates of Worcester and North Brookfield, formerly vice-president general of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Several Bostonians will go over to Washington for the large dinner which Mrs. William P. Draper is to give at her palatial residence there early in the month. Her recent costume ball goes on record as the most brilliant event of the year at the Capital.

ELLIOTT GIVES RULES TO 2,500 FOR 'SAFE' ROAD

[illegible] set to get down to business and put this safety movement through. Chairman Howard Elliott of the New Haven Railroad told 2,500 of the road's employees at the National Theatre in the first series of meetings in a safety first" campaign.

"I have given you plenty of 'don'ts.' Let me give a few 'dos' such as:

"Do be careful.

"Do be alert and efficient.

"Do keep in good mental and physical health.

"Do be loyal and stand up for the railroad when it is attacked.

"Do be ready always to give courteous and direct answers to the public.

"Do show the public that it has a duty toward us.

"Let's have courage and perseverance and improve our record."

Mr. Elliott told the men of a report made by a railroad brakeman to his superintendent, in railroad slang, ending with, "And a battleship came down de track and took us in de slacks."

"That," said Mr. Elliott, "is what seems to have happened to the poor New Haven. A battleship seems to have come and took us in de slacks.

"What is the cause of railroad accidents? Often it's a failure to understand or obey rules. Sometimes it's recklessness on the part of the men, though I think railroad men are learning more and more that they have no right to be reckless. Sometimes it's simply inattentiveness.

"You ought to have good working conditions and good wages. The public wants good service. But we cannot give these things unless we get enough revenue. Revenue and expenditures are out of balance now, and until the balance is restored, we cannot get the highest efficiency. But no safety appliance is safe in the hands of an inefficient man.

"Let us have courage and perseverance and we will improve our record, so that we will soon be at the head of the list instead of somewhere pretty far down."

DEAD CHINAMAN CHANGES THE WORLD MAP

Yes, the completion of the Panama Canal by the United States was a direct result of the revolution which created the Panama Republic.

Only one fatality marked this bloodless revolution—an opium-smoking Chinaman was killed in his bunk by one of the two stray shells, fired into Panama City by the Colombian gunboats.

This is one of the curious sidelights on this greatest of man's engineering triumphs. It is but one of a thousand thrilling incidents related by the eminent international writer, Willis J. Abbot, in the remarkable book.

From RINGSIDE And BLEACHERS

By RIGHT CROSS.

It is our modest prediction that within a few years soccer football will be next to baseball in popularity on this side of the water. It is pretty close to that now. There are several flourishing leagues in this vicinity and the game commands as much space in the newspapers in the Fall and early Winter as baseball does in the Summer months.

In Europe nearly every Continental nation is playing international games with England. Austria fell into line last Summer. Germany has gone wild about it. France has played it for years.

Probably there are a number of reasons for the steady growth of the sport. The principal one is that it is a grand old game. It will be as popular as polo would be if polo were not so expensive. The two games are equally primal.

There are no rules to speak of. Unnecessary roughness, of course, is penalized. You must not use your hands and the basic off-side rule that appears in all games where the object is to advance the ball—that about lets the soccer rules out.

From every standpoint it is a splendid game. The spectator can see what is going on at every moment. It is all running and kicking and passing the ball with the feet.

The public school boys are going in for it more and more, and as these grow up into young men and leave school the real sport of the game will begin. They will form clubs and play for the love of it, a development impossible to our college football, which is a slobbery scramble at best.

One reason that Harvard is willing to play Michigan has just come to light. EVANS FAVORS FOURSOME AS FINE GOLF TEST

By CHARLES "CHICK" EVANS

There is a good bit of discussion at present concerning the relative merits of the foursome and the four-ball match. There are many golfers who do not discriminate and who call all matches including four players foursomes.

To an Englishman or Scotsman this is an unpardonable error, and I mention for the benefit of the untitiated that a foursome is a two-ball match, each partner alternately striking the same ball, and a four-ball match is exactly what its name signifies, and each golfer plays his own ball.

It seems the Lesley Cup matches (a tri-city event—Philadelphia, New York and Boston) have been foursomes, and many of the prominent Eastern players believe this not to be the best test of the comparative skill of the players as a team. They add, moreover, that this foursome is deadly dull.

Looking at the matter dispassionately, there is no question that the foursome is the best test of team play, for the players act more nearly as one. I think, however, there are few people who would care to go out to play foursome out of a desire to golf—the shots are too few, and the distances confronting them too unaccustomed. The social opportunities are greater, perhaps.

The four-ball match may be more replete with brilliant shots, and from the point of view of the spectator is more spectacular.

In England and Scotland, however, there is great partiality shown for the foursome, but to my mind the four-ball match is more enjoyable but I am not sure that it is as good a test of team play.

Fraternity Warns Minors Not to Sign

NEW YORK, Jan. 26.—As the result of a disagreement between the National Association and the Baseball Players' Fraternity all minor league players who are members of the fraternity have been notified not to sign 1914 contracts until further notice. This latest development in the triangular struggle between the baseball players, Federal League and organized baseball is based upon the alleged failure of the National Association to live up to the so-called Cincinnati agreement, recently entered into by the representatives of organized baseball and the fraternity.

McFarland's Terms Halt Gibbons Bout

NEW YORK, Jan. 26.—Nothing has been settled regarding the proposed battle between Packey McFarland and Mike Gibbons. Several weeks ago the men reached an agreement to box at 145 pounds, scaling at 4 o'clock, and to decide the question of supremacy in this city. But that is as far as negotiations have progressed. No date has been fixed for the bout, and it is said that the principals are at odds over the division of the spoils.

According to the latest information McFarland wants a $10,000 guarantee to meet Gibbons for ten rounds. It is said that he also insists upon a $1,500 forfeit from Gibbons to guarantee weight, which the latter is unwilling to post. Gibbons is satisfied to take 25 per cent. of the receipts.

Stoneham High Leads School Rifle Teams

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Great improvement was shown in the third week of the contest for the public high school rifle shooting championship of the United States. Deering School, Portland, Me., led all contestants with 953 shots out of a possible 1,000. Stoneham, Mass. High landed first place in Class B, with a score of 923.

The third week of the intercollegiate rifle shooting league showed little change among the leaders. Michigan Agricultural and Massachusetts Agricultural tied for first place in Class A.

HOCKEY NEWS AND NOTES

McGiffen, the Toronto player who was banished for his rough playing in the N. H. A. series, has returned and in the last two contests showed that he is capable of playing a wonderful game inside the rules. In the early games his checking was hard and he injured many players but he has dropped these tactics in his recent games.

Desilets and Scott have joined the Canadians. These players are expected to greatly strengthen the team in its future league contests. Scott is a good hockey player and only needs a little coaching to put him in the class with the N. H. A. players.

President Lichtenhein of the Wanderers hockey team appeared before the N. H. A. magnates at a meeting and demanded that Joe Hall of Quebec be suspended for the rest of the season.

The Ontarios have found it hard sledding this season and are running in last position in the league standing. This team lost several of its best players and was forced to build up an entirely new aggregation.

The new rules laid down by President Quinn of the N. H. A., regarding bodying the men into the boards, by the officials is for a lot of criticism. The "fans" saw their favorites bodyched for body checks that were before considered legal.

JOE WOODMAN SAYS THE PROPOSED JOHNSON-MORAN BOUT IN PARIS IS A "STALL"

WOODMAN SAYS MORAN-JOHNSON BOUT IS A STALL

NEW YORK, Jan. 26.—Recent information from Paris indicates that the proposed Jack Johnson-Frank Moran bout to be decided there in June is not a sure thing after all. When the match was made it was said that "several Americans with money" had guaranteed to pay $35,000 to the negro, win, lose or draw. But it appears now that nobody has guaranteed anything and that a French promoter simply has agreed to gamble with the sporting public.

Joe Woodman, manager of Sam Langford, in a letter to friends here, says that the Moran match is a stall. He insists that Langford will be Johnson's next opponent and that they may come together in the National Sporting Club of London, unless the French promoters offer better inducements.

If Johnson sticks to Moran, however, Woodman writes he will bring Langford home and will try to match him with the winner of the Gunboat Smith-Willard fight, to be decided in San Francisco on July 4.

Title Pool Tourney to Open Tonight

The opening game in the series to decide the New England pool championship will be played this evening at the White Bear room. Lauzon, who will oppose Upton in the first block of 125 balls, is a new comer after championship honors, but if the prognostications of the followers of the pocket billiard game in Lynn—which is his home and citizens are true, his opportunity of winning first place looks good.

Upton, who is the present title holder, can be relied upon to make Lauzon show all the speed he possesses.

Hannes Kolehmainen to Race Kiviat Here

Hannes Kolehmainen, the Finnish champion, and Abel Kiviat, the great Staten Island runner, will be among the starters in the three-mile invitation race, which is to be a feature of the first athletic meet of the Irish-American A. A., to be held in Mechanics Building next Saturday night. Billy Kramer, Louis Stoit, Joe Silva of the B. A. A., Hugh Maguire of Waltham, and possibly Captain Boyd of the Harvard cross-country team, will also be starters. Manager Edward M. Hopkins has received 700 entries for the meet up to date.

Fall River Rovers Out for One Year

One of the heaviest sentences ever imposed on a member of the United States of America Football Association was meted out to the Fall River Rovers, which as a team and players individually were suspended for one year from January date for their recent trip to St. Louis, where they played teams not affiliated with the organization. Manager Howarth of the team was suspended for five years.

Ouimet Defeated in Four Ball Match

PINEHURST, N. C., Jan. 26.—A gallery of approximately 200 golf enthusiasts turned out here to follow the play of Francis Ouimet, the Brookline, Mass., national open champion, who figured in a "best ball" foursome with Jack Dolly as his partner. Their opponents, Paul Tewksbury and Donald J. Ross, won handily. Ouimet had an off-day and his play was far below form.

Bartlett and Beals Win Racquet Places

Mathew Bartlett of the Tennis and Racquet Club and S. L. Beals of the B. A. Emery of the Tennis and Racquet Club and D. Wright of the Union Boat Club, respectively.

Joe Jackson Turns Down $65,000 Offer

GREENVILLE, S. C., Jan. 26. — "I hardly considered the offer made me by the Federal League, although $65,000 for three seasons is much in advance of the sum I am to receive from Cleveland," said Joe Jackson, outfielder of the Cleveland Americans, here today. Jackson said he signed with Cleveland more than a week ago.

AMERICANS IN COURT BATTLE FOR 'KING' COLE

CHICAGO, Jan. 26.—That the American League intends to go the very limit in its efforts to regain the services of Leonard "King" Cole, the New York American League pitcher who has signed with the Chicago Federal League club, was indicated in reports here today.

According to one rumor, President Ban Johnson of the junior circuit is said to have admitted that the American League would use money to back the legal fight for Cole. Just what mode of procedure would be followed, the executive would not say, but he let it be known that the Federals are in for a knockdown and drag-out scrap.

Cole says he wrote President Frank Farrell of the New York Highlanders, and in his communication stated his terms for working next season under Manager Chance.

Failing to hear from the Yankee magnate, Cole got busy with the Federals, and on December 21 signed a contract to hobnob with Tinker's army for a period of three years. A letter arrived from President Farrell on January 2, the New Yorker having accepted Cole's terms. But the "pardon came to late," as it were, and now the Independents are claiming the former club star.

President Johnson today explained a part of the puzzle by stating that Farrell had delayed sending a reply to Cole's letter, preferring to wait until after the meeting of the national commission and the reports of the Players' Fraternity at Cincinnati, January 6.

"Because It's Better"
Alley's ALE

"Busting 'Em" by TY COBB

THIS is the second installment of a series of baseball stories that Tyrus Raymond Cobb, probably the greatest ball player of all time, has written for the Boston American. In this series Cobb will show what it means to be one of the greatest batters the national sport ever has known, and in the telling will relate a few amusing and interesting incidents that have come under his notice.

OLD Billy Sullivan, catcher of the Chicago White Sox, used to be a wonder at figuring out batters and then crossing them. He slipped one over on Lajoie toward the end of the season of 1908 which practically knocked Cleveland out of the pennant that year and gave the flag to Detroit. That is why I heard the play discussed so often and why I attach so much importance to it.

At this time to which I refer Chicago, Cleveland, St. Louis and Detroit were all bunched for the pennant. Cleveland looked best, while St. Louis was about to crack, and the White Sox still had a chance.

In the final game of the last series of the season between Chicago and Cleveland, the late Addie Joss was working against Ed Walsh at his best.

The White Sox had a lead of one run, but the Naps had managed to get three men on the bases in the last inning of the game. Two were out when Lajoie came to the bat as the final hope of Cleveland. It was a ticklish situation, and Walsh and Sullivan went to work carefully on the great slugger.

Big Ed Walsh Feeds Lajoie Some Spitters.

Lajoie always had some difficulty in hitting Walsh's spitters, so Big Ed fed him a couple and he pulled them down the lines for hard drives, but each a few feet foul. The count on Lajoie was finally narrowed down to three balls and two strikes, with the game and maybe the pennant depending on that next pitch.

Sullivan signalled for a fast ball, but Walsh shook his head. He had great faith in his spitter when it was right, and it was that day, and he desired to place the burden on the spit ball and take a chance on it going wide of the plate ann losing his man and perhaps the game.

A spitter is hard to control, but Walsh did not figure Lajoie would let it go if the ball was at all close to being a strike.

After Walsh had shaken his head to the sign for a fast one, Sullivan came back at him with it, and once more Walsh shook his head in answer. Sullivan would not give in and handed the spitball pitcher the fast ball sign for the third time. At last Walsh conceded it.

Cleveland Crack Is Fooled by Sullivan.

He bluffed at wetting the ball and wound up, with all three men on the bases on the move, but it shot across the plate at Lajoie's knees and fooled the big Frenchman, who had been looking for a spitter and expected the ball to break out, when he saw how low it was coming.

He thought it would surely be a ball, and it would have been had Walsh thrown a spitter at the same height as the fast ball he handed to Lajoie. The "break" would have carried it away.

During the progress of the discussion between Walsh and Sullivan on the kind of ball to give Lajoie in the crisis, a conversation carried on by means of signs, the batter had been figuring this way: Sullivan had probably asked for a fast one and Walsh had shaken his head. Billy had repeated his request for a fast one, but Walsh had shaken his head a second time. Then again, and Walsh had nodded that the sign suited him.

Sullivan had given in, so thought Lajoie, and Walsh would throw the spitter. He figured on the wrong man giving in, and his miscalculation cost Cleveland the game. If the pitcher had been a spit ball, as Lajoie figured, he would have gotten a base on balls, a run would have been forced home and the score would have been tied.

How Joe Jackson Broke Into Big League.

His does was wrong. That was all. Nothing was lacking about his mechanical execution. There never in my mind, but I will have more to say about that later in this series.

Joe Jackson is also a wonderful natural batter. He was ripe when he first came up to the big league and joined the Athletics in 1908. Jackson was born a sticker, has always been ripe since he has been strong enough to swing a bat and will be able to "bust 'em" long after his legs and arms wear out.

It is the way with all men of his type. They retain their batting ability after their other big league qualities have been frayed out. Look at Mike Donlin and even Lajoie, who is beginning to slow up on his legs, but who wings the ball as hard as ever.

But Jackson, to my mind, loses a lot of hits he would get if he studied out the game. For instance, he cannot tell any one else how to bat. He doesn't know himself how he hits, or when he is going to hit, or where he will hit the ball.

ALL through the speech-making my husband had rolled uneasily in his chair. He had also helped himself frequently from the decanter, so that when he got up to reply he was scarcely sober.

In his drawling voice he thanked the Bishop, and said that having made up his mind to the marriage he had never dreamt of raising difficulties about religion. As to the modern notions about the relations of husband and wife, he did not think a girl brought up in a convent would give him much trouble on the subject.

"Not likely," cried my father. "I'll clear her of that anyway."

"So I thank you for myself and for my family," continued Mr. Russell, "and (this to Lady Margaret) I thank you for my sister, too, and that's all."

I felt sick and cold and ashamed. A rush of fresh color under the skin of my face must have made me red to the roots of my hair.

In all this speaking about my marriage there had not been one word about myself—myself, really, a living soul with all her future happiness at stake. I cannot say what vague pulse took possession of me, but I remember that when my husband sat down I made a forced laugh, though I knew well that I wanted to cry.

In an agony of shame I was beginning to feel a wild desire to escape from the room and even from the house, that I might breathe in some of the free wind outside, when all at once I became aware that somebody else was speaking.

It was Father Dan. He had risen unannounced from his seat at the end of the table. I saw his sock coat which was much worn at the seams. I saw his round face which was flushed. I heard the vibrating note in his soft Irish voice which told me he was deeply moved; and then I dropped my head, for I knew what was coming.

Thirty-Third Chapter

"Sir Cyril Neill," said Father Dan, "may your parish priest take the liberty of speaking without being spoken to?"

My father made some response, and then a hush fell over the dining-room. Either the storm ceased for a time, or in my great agitation it seemed to do so, for I did not hear it.

"We have heard a great deal about the marriage we have celebrated today. But what is it, after all, but something? What is marriage? Is it the execution of a contract? Is it the signing of a register? Is it even the taking of an oath before an altar? No. Marriage is the sacred covenant which two souls make with each other, the woman with the man, the man with the woman, when she chooses him from all other men, when he chooses her from all other women, to belong to each other for ever, so that no misfortune, no storm of life, no sin on either side shall ever put them apart. That's what marriage is, and all we have been doing today is to call on God and man to bear witness to that holy bond."

My heart was beating high. I raised my head, and I think my eyes must have been shining. I looked at the Bishop. His face was showing signs of vexation.

"Sir O'Neill, sir," cried Father Dan, raising his trembling voice, "you say your daughter has a big fortune and your husband has a big name, and what more do they want in this world? I'll tell you what they want, sir. They want love, love on both sides, if they are to be good and happy, and if they've got that they've got something which neither wealth nor rank can buy."

I had dropped my head again, but under my eyelashes I could see that the company were sitting spellbound. Only my husband was chuffing in his cups, and the Bishop was playing at his gold chain.

"My Bishop," said Father Dan, "has told us of the submission a wife owes to her husband, and of her duty to be lovely and wise and faithful in his eyes. But even if the answering thought that the husband on his part owes something to the wife? Aren't we told that he shall put away everything and everybody for her sake, and cleave to her and cling to her and they shall be one flesh? Isn't that, too, a divine commandment?"

My heart was throbbing so loud by this time that the next words were lost to me. When I came to myself again Father Dan was saying:

"Think what marriage means to a woman—a young girl especially. It means the breaking of old ties, the beginning of a new life, the setting out into an unknown world on a voyage from which there can be no return. In her weakness and her helplessness she leaves one dependence for another, the shelter of a father for the shelter of a husband. What does she bring to the man she marries? Herself, everything she is, everything she can be, to be made or marred by him, and never, never, never to be the same to any other man whatsoever as long as life shall last."

WANTED TO FLEE.

More than ever now, but for other reasons, I wanted to fly from the room.

"Friends, cried Father Dan, "we don't know much of the bridegroom in this parish, but we know the bride. We've known her all her life. We know what she is. I do, anyway, for you are my father, Mr. O'Neill, sir, I am her father also. So when the Bishop said she was born I baptized her. I took her out of the arms of the angel who bore her. So she is my child for all time to me."

His voice was breaking—I was sobbing—though he was speaking quite loudly I could scarcely hear him—I could scarcely see him—I only knew that God was standing in my darkness and raising his trembling hand to my husband.

"She is my child, too, I say, and now that she is leaving us, now that you are taking her away from us, I charge you, my lord, to be good and faithful to her, as you will have to answer for her soul some day."

What else he said I did not know. From that moment I was blind and deaf to everything. Nevertheless I was conscious that after Father Dan has ceased to speak there was a painful silence. I thought the company seemed to be startled and even a little annoyed by the emotion so suddenly and then so painful in his eyes. But even if the answering thought that the husband on his part owes something to the wife? Aren't we told that he shall put away everything and everybody for her sake, and cleave to her and cling to her and they shall be one flesh? Isn't that, too, a divine commandment?"

Just as we were about to start, the storm, which must certainly have fallen for a while, sprang up suddenly, and when Tommy the Mate (barely recognizable in borrowed black garments) opened the door the wind came rushing into the house with a long-drawn whirr.

I had said good-bye to the old man, and was stepping into the porch when I remembered Father Dan. He was standing in his shabby sack coat with a sorrowful face in a dark corner by the door, as if he had placed himself there to see the last of me. I wanted to put my arms around his neck, but I knew that would be wrong, so I dropped to my knees and kissed his hand and he gave me his blessing.

My husband, who was waiting by the side of the throbbing automobile, said impatiently:

"Come, come, dear, don't keep me in the rain."

I got into the landaulette, my husband got in after me, the g— began to move, there were cries from within the house ("Good-bye!" "Good luck!") which sounded like stifled shrieks as they were carried off by the wind without, and then we were under weigh.

As we we turned the corner of the drive something prompted me to look back at my mother's window—with its memories of my first going to school.

At the next moment we were crossing the bridge—with its memories of Martin Conrad and William Rufus.

At the next we were on the road.

"Mary, my love," she said, catching my eye, "I'm just telling her ladyship I don't think in the world what I'll do when you are gone."

THE START

My husband was there too, wearing a heavy overcoat with the collar up, and peering from a group of fussing gentlemen under waterfall prognostics of passage.

"Good, but I'm fearing it will be a dirty passage, my lord."

"Chat!" said my father. "The wind's from the southwest. They'll soon get shelter."

The first of our two cars came round and we husband's valet went off in it to meet with our luggage. Then we followed and arrived, and the time came for our departure. I think I blessed everybody except myself, for my tears were all gone at this time.

Thirty-Fourth Chapter.

"Thank God, that's over," said my husband. Then, half apologetically, he added: "You didn't seem to enjoy it any more than myself, my dear."

At the entrance to our village a number of men stood firing guns; in the middle a group of girls were stretching a rope across the road; a number of small flags, torn by the wind and wet with the rain, were rattling on flagstaffs hung out from some of the window sills; a few women, with shawls over their heads, were sheltering on the weather side of the porches to see us pass.

My husband was impatient of our simple Island customs. Once or twice he lowered the window of the car, threw out a handful of silver, and at the same time urged the chauffeur to drive quicker. As soon as we were clear of the village he fell back in his seat, saying:

"Heavens, how sleepy I am! No wonder either! Late going to bed last night and up so early this morning!"

After a moment he began to yawn, and almost before he could have been aware of it he had closed his eyes. At the next moment he was asleep.

It was a painful, almost a hideous sleep. His cheeks scrolled and sank; his lips parted, he was breathing heavily, and sometimes gaping like a carp out of water.

I could not detach my eyes from his face, which, without eyes to relieve it, seemed to be almost repulsive now. It would be difficult to describe my sensations. I felt dreadfully humiliated. Even my personal pride was wounded. I remembered what Father Dan had said about husband and wife being one flesh, and told myself that this was what I belonged to, what belonged to me—this! Then I tried to reproach and reprove myself, but in order to do so I had to turn my eyes away.

Our road to Blackwater lay over the ridge of a hill on a espound to the wind from the south-west. When we reached this point the clouds seemed to roll up from the sea like tempestuous battalions. Torrential rain fell on the car and came dripping in from the juncture of the landaulette roof. Some of it fell on the sleeper and he awoke with a start.

"Jumping—!"

He stopped, as if caught in guilt, and began to apologize again.

"Was I asleep? I really think I must have been. Stupid, isn't it? Excuse me."

He blinked his eyes as if to empty them of sleep, looked me over for a moment or two in silence, and then said with a smile which made me shudder:

"So you and I are man and wife, my dear?"

I made no answer, and, still looking at me, he said:

"Well, worse things might have happened after all—what do you think?"

BEGAN COMPLIMENTS

Still I did not answer him, feeling a certain shame, not to say disgust. Then he began to pay me some compliments on my appearance.

"Do you know you're charming, my dear, really charming!"

That stung me, and made me shudder. I don't know why, unless it was because the words gave me the sense of having been used before to other women. I turned my eyes away again.

"Don't turn away, dear. Let me see those big black eyes of yours. I adore black eyes. They always picture like a stinlet."

He reached forward as he spoke and drew me to him. I felt frightened and pushed him off.

"What's this?" he said, as if surprised.

But after another moment he laughed, and in the tone of a man who had had much to do with women and thought he knew how to deal with them, he said:

"Wants to be coaxed, does she? They all do, bless them!"

Saying this he pulled me closer to him, putting his arm about my waist, but once more I drew and forcibly pushed him from me.

His face darkened for an instant, and then appeared again.

"Oh, I see," he said. "Offended, is she? Paying me out for having paid so little court to her? Well, she's right there, too, bless her! But never mind! You're a decidedly good-looking little woman, my dear, and if I have neglected you thus far, I intend to make up for it during the honeymoon. So come, little gal, let's be friends."

Taking hold of me again, he tried to kiss me, putting at the same time his hand on the bosom of my dress, but I twisted my face aside and prevented him.

"Oh! Oh! Hurt her modesty, have I?" he said, laughing like a man who was quite sure both of himself and of me. "But you'll get over that by and by. Wait awhile! Wait awhile!"

By his time I was trembling with the shock of a terror that was entirely new to me. I could not explain to myself the nature of it, but it was there, and I could not escape from it.

Hitherto, when I thought of my marriage to Lord Rita I had been troubled by the absence of love between us; and what I meant to myself by love—the love of husband and wife—was the kind of feeling I had for the Reverend Mother, heightened and deepened and spiritualized, as I believed, by the fact (with all its mysterious significance that the one was a man and the other a woman.

Sale Prices $25.00 to $150.00.

Rollins & Company.

IT was an alluring advertisement. The voluminous Sunday paper was filled with many other "ads," proclaiming "unprecedented values," but Helen knew that the Rollins' reductions were genuine.

This store had the reputation of never misrepresenting their sales. The marked-down ticket on any of Rollins' goods was always the original ticket. It was never a special ticket re-marked for the occasion.

Helen always managed to have enough clothes left over to carry her through the early part of the Winter, that she might wait to buy her gowns at the January "clearance sales."

This year she expected greater reductions than ever before, for several times lately Warren had said, "Things are going to be mighty cheap in the shops after New Year's. It's been a pretty dull season and they'll turn everything they can into money."

So it was with keen anticipation of getting some really wonderful bargains that Helen entered the suit department at Rollins'.

"Something in an afternoon gown," to the saleswoman who approached her.

"Any special color, ma'am?"

"Yes, something in dull blue—not navy."

"I'll show you what we have."

She brought out a few armful of gowns, but they were either navy or a hard, bright electric blue, and almost all were of satin charmeuse.

Helen had long ago discovered that any shiny, satin-finished material was hard and unbecoming, so she always chose her gowns in soft dull silks or crepe de chine.

A CHARMING EFFECT

Last year, when Warren's mother gave her a dress pattern of pale blue satin meteor for an evening gown, Helen had it made up wrong side out. The result was charming, for the wrong side had a soft, dull luster.

She often wondered why manufacturers persisted in making shiny, satin-finished fabrics, and why so many women persisted in wearing them when they were so universally trying and unbecoming.

"This is a very pretty model," the saleswoman held up another gown.

"No, I don't care for satin, haven't you anything in crepe de chine?"

"Must it be blue?"

"I'd rather have blue unless it's a taupe or a very dull gray green."

This time the saleswoman returned with gowns of various shades.

"Let me see this one," as Helen instantly glimpsed the one blue gown. "Yes, that's more like it."

"That's an imported model, madam. It's been marked down from eighty-five," glancing at the ticket, "to fifty-two fifty."

"Yes, that's charming," murmured Helen, for the gown was of chiffon combined with a soft brocaded silk of the same shade of dull blue.

It was, however, more than Helen wanted to pay, for she had hoped to get something for about forty.

"No, I don't care for fur," as the woman displayed a gown with a fur-edged panuier flounce. "I want something that I can wear the whole year around. Oh, no—no." waving aside a castor gown with a bright plaid girdle. "I wouldn't care for that at ALL! No, I don't care for that green either. This blue is the only one I'm at all interested in, and it's more than I wish to pay."

"Oh, but it's a wonderful bargain! Wouldn't you like to try it on?"

Seeing Helen hesitate, she promptly led the way to a fitting room.

"It's going to be MUCH too big!" murmured Helen when a moment later the gown was thrown over her head.

HELEN WEAKENS

"We can easily alter that," cheerfully. "This color just suits you."

"How much would the alterations be?"

"About five dollars. The fitter can tell you exactly."

"That would make it fifty-seven fifty," mused Helen. "No, that's more than I ought to pay. And it's enough too large. A gown never looks right that has to be altered so much. I'm afraid," with a sigh, as she began to take off the dress, "I'll have to let it go."

"Just a moment! There's a little model almost that shade I'd like you to see—if it's not sold. It's a bit soiled from being in the window, but it's been out to about one-third."

In a few minutes the woman returned with a triumphant

"Here it is, madam; I was afraid it had been sold."

"Oh, that's so severe," murmured Helen disappointedly, for the gown's plainness was unrelieved except for a wide yellow satin collar and vest.

"But the lines are perfect! It's a French model, too—here's the label! And look at the price, twenty-nine, reduced from seventy-five! It's only the collar that's soiled. You could easily fix that with a bit of lace. Haven't you some lace of your own that you could use?"

When Helen tried the gown on she was surprised to find how well it looked. The lines WERE good! The draped skirt was graceful, and its very plainness gave it an air of distinction. An imported gown for twenty-nine dollars—it was most tempting.

"You'll make a mistake if you don't take that," with genuine enthusiasm. "And you'd better have us alter it for you. I'll get Miss Walker, one of our best fitters. She'll know just what it will need."

"All right, I'll take it. I have some lace that I'll let her fix in the neck and vest, for I particularly dislike satin next to my face."

The fitter was sent for, and with rapid skill she pinned up the gown and marked it for alteration.

"You want this a round length?"

Helen nodded and mounted the carpeted platform while the skirt was turned up and marked.

THE DETAILS

"I wish you would put in a wide inside waist belt," requested Helen.

"Oh, yes, we always do that. It gives a firmer waist line. Now about this collar, do you want it that high?"

"Oh, no—no, I hate that satin collar. Just rip it off. Make it a round neck, and I'll bring you some lace, some real lace, to fill in there."

"Yes, bring your lace for the next fitting," quick to catch the idea. "That'll improve it a lot. We'll need two fittings on this."

"How much will the alterations be?"

"Five dollars—we couldn't do it for less."

This seemed rather high, but as the gown was so cheap, Helen could not protest.

While the clerk went out to the desk to get the time for the fitting Helen slipped off the gown, feeling that she was getting a real bargain. It would be a serviceable dress, too, much more serviceable than the chiffon, as she could wear it practically the year around. If they should go abroad again this Spring, it would be the very thing.

It was plain enough to wear even to breakfast at a hotel.

And Helen's mind glowed with a vivid picture of a breakfast room in a big London hotel. She saw herself seated at a table by a long window, with stately crimson velvet hangings—and she was wearing—no that at

Curiously enough, when a woman pictures herself in a new gown, she is always wearing it at some particular place. She may never wear it at that place nor look as well in it as in those mental pictures. After it has become part of her wardrobe, the pictures fade, but they are always a part of the glamour of getting a new frock.

Half an hour later, as Helen was leaving the store, she met Mrs. Dalton at the exit door.

"Oh, I've just bought the most exquisite evening gown at Boley's," she enthused. "Have you been here? Oh, you MUST go before they're all picked over. I've never seen such reductions—their best models, too."

"I just got an afternoon gown here"—began Helen.

"Oh, you should have gone to Boley's first! Rollins' are all right in some things—but I never cared for their gowns."

When Mrs. Dalton passed on, Helen was left with disquieting thoughts. Hoping to satisfy herself that she could not have done better, she went straight to Boley's.

A SHOCK

She asked for the same thing—an afternoon gown in dull blue. To her dismay, the first gown the girl brought out she liked infinitely better than the one she had bought. It required very little alteration, and there was no soiled collar to be taken off. It was RIGHT just as it was, and it had been reduced from eighty-five to thirty-two, only seven dollars difference; she would gladly have paid ten.

Feeling somewhat guilty of having taken the girl's time to look at a gown she had no intention of buying, Helen thanked her and hurried away.

Oh, why HADN'T she gone to Boley's first? The more she thought of the gown she had bought, the less she felt she would like it. And the three—after all, it would look "cut on." Helen knew that the "cut" of a gown was a subtle thing, easily marred by any changes or additions.

Before she reached home she was fully convinced that the lace would always look as though it did not belong. The cheapness of the gown no longer appealed to her, for there was no economy in getting a thing she would never like.

Promptly she conceived a strong, deep-rooted aversion to Rollins'. She would never buy another thing there. The unreasoning injustice of this was not apparent to Helen, for Helen was essentially feminine. And it is a purely feminine privilege to form such aversions without reason or cause.

By the Strings

A little girl, finding her grandfather dozing, clambered on to his knee and endeavored to awaken him by pulling his eyelashes. Annoyed at being disturbed from a peaceful nap, the old man scolded the child for her roughness.

"Woush!" she exclaimed, pouting. "I wasn't woush. I was only trying to open your eyes by the strings."

The Blarney Glass

No. 1

By NELL BRINKLEY

THE BLARNEY GLASS is just any tall gilded mirror, and, like the fortune-crystal that is clouded and will tell no prophesies when any but the sorceress holds it in hand, so it reflects humans just as they are without a frill or conceit unless a FLATTERER is in the picture.

Here it never would work without the girl! Elbows on satin couch arm—and her admiring face in her two hands, she gives the tiny, spineless man words of taffy—and as he lifts his flattered eyes there sweetly looking him in the eye from the silver surface of the Blarney Glass is what he wishes to be and what she has made him dream he is. So may a chap listen to the wood-dove voice of a soft little woman and swell within and without until he towers—God like a man to put adoration into the heart of any maid!

Tabloid Fables

WHY, Mother Dear, does Mrs. Jinks so fiercely hate red-haired women?

Because, My Child, she once dreamed she saw her husband making love to one.

What, Mother, is meant by unfair advantage?

There are many meanings, Child, but in my mind the real unfair advantage is to publish her age when giving a woman's obituary.

Does a woman, Mother, ever consciously state her age?

The only time, Little One, is when she wishes the statement of her added years to give weight to her advice.

Why, Mother, is it so seldom a man dares invite a guest to dinner?

Because, My Dear, he has to have his wife's permission, and she has to have the cook's.

What, Mother, is meant by the advantages of a large city?

Taking less time, Little One, in getting on and off the street cars, and being crowded worse when on them.

Are these all, Mother Mine?

One may also see more indecent pictures at the art galleries than one sees in a smaller town.

Are there any jokes, Mother Mine that are funny?

There are two varieties, My Child, that are always good; those told by the man who tells few, and those by the man who tells many.

Why, Mother, is meant by woman's intuition?

Hush, Child, you may be overheard; it is a term de plume for suspicion.

Why, Mother, do you laugh at your own compliments?

Because, My Child, they are so limited in their compliments. They say of a woman who is a good housekeeper that "she could get a meal in the dark, and that one could eat off her kitchen floor, at the time never was when a woman and a guy got a meal in the dark or ever ate off her floor.

Why, Mother, is a negative?

I am not quite sure, Child, but I think it is some sort of a store garment worn just to annoy the husband when he neglect things.

Why, Mother, is the man who stands in front of the singer and swings his arms?

He is the bracketer, Little One and he is indescribable to ordinary people by the singers and hurry the sheet music sellers' assistants and wrecks.

Does the word "Pressing" mean anything to an American woman, Mother?

No, Little One, if she has pale hair or complexion.

What, Mother, is meant by "being unscientific?"

It is a term, Little One, used to describe behaviour in a woman, when she were not so prominent, would be declared downright shocking.

DON'T TRUST CALOMEL

Thousands Experience Bad After Effects From This Dangerous Drug.

A Safe Vegetable Substitute is Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets for the Liver.

Dr. F. M. Edwards, a prominent physician of Ohio, has discovered a laxative and liver tonic in a combination of vegetable materials mixed with pure olive oil, which is in effect, almost exactly like calomel, except that there are none of the bad after effects.

Dr. Edwards has long been a foe of calomel, though he recognized its value along with its dangers.

His distrust of the mercurial drug eventually started him, years ago, towards experiments with the view of discovering a substitute, and he has been for several years in possession of the long-sought-for combination, which is in the shape of a little sugar-coated, olive-colored tablet.

The results of 17 years' experience and practice are embodied in these marvelous little tablets.

They are called Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets. And their effect on the liver has been the means of relief to many of Dr. Edwards' regular patients as well as to thousands of others who have suffered and were afraid of calomel.

There is no necessity, when you take Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets, now following them, to watch easily, scrutinize, sifting adds, for fear of, as you do after taking calomel. Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets act gently but surely.

They are purely vegetable, and you can eat anything you like after taking them. 10c and 25c per box. The Olive Tablet Company, Columbus, Ohio.

is the only peroxide of hydrogen specified by the U. S. Navy Department for its supplies at naval depots.

Reason: Dioxogen is pure and does not require acetanilid as a preservative; therefore it does not taste bitter nor smell rank when it gets old. It also "keeps" in the hot, moist climate of Panama or in the torrid heat of the Philippines, whether the bottle is left open or closed.

If it's the proper peroxide for the navy, it's the best peroxide for your home. Buy it by name.

LATEST STOCK MARKETS

By W. H. ROSS, Financial Editor

Stocks ranged higher this afternoon, but gains ruled small. The feature of the Boston market was the decline in Boston Elevated immediately after the announcement of the reduction of the dividend rate from 6 to 4 per cent. per annum. It sold as low as 83¾, or 4½ from Saturday's final figure, but by afternoon it had recovered to 85. Boston & Maine had weakened a point, but by afternoon had recovered and gained one. New Haven was up 1 and United Fruit of 1, while American Telephone was a shade higher. Granby was the strongest copper, advancing a point. There were fractional gains for Calumet & Arizona and North Butte, while Mohawk sustained a small loss. The local market was quiet, but like the one in New York had improved in tone.

In New York Mexican Petroleum had advanced 4, which about put out the bear theory that there is more likelihood of serious trouble between the United States and Mexico. Other lesser gains were Canadian Pacific ¾, Southern Pacific ¾, Missouri Pacific ⅝, Lehigh Valley ¾, Reading ¾, Ohio ¾, Union Pacific ¼, Steel ¼, Amalgamated Copper, American Smelting, Utah Copper and Amalgamated Saturday to 75 cents, and Guggenheim Exploration 1 point to $2 lower, while Kansas City Southern, American Agricultural Chemical and American Smelting Securities preferred B Company 1¼.

OPENED IRREGULAR.

Irregularity prevailed when the New York market opened, professional traders as a class working for a further reaction. But in spite of bear pressure the undertone was steady and within a few minutes most leaders were showing gains. This was contrary to the price trend in London, where Americans were heavy and rules lower, Steel opened unchanged on this side, and in half an hour was a half point higher.

Profit-taking was on a considerable scale, but was in a measure offset by investment buying of a number of issues. The public showed as much interest as was displayed last week. According to the views of some observers there has been selling of magnitude of late by important interests who have profited heavily by the recent rise, and are now seeking a chance to come in buying on a lower level. There was a great deal of pressure upon leading, which sold ex-dividend, soon after the opening, but the drives were not very successful. It declined only a small fraction when offerings were freest.

MARKET LESS ACTIVE.

The market was less active than it has averaged of late and raiders were disappointed at the comparatively small amount of stock they were able to dislodge. There was a return to talk of rumors that relations of this country with Mexico had again become acute, and that the conference scheduled for between President Wilson and members of congressional foreign affairs committees was evidence that such was the case.

Steel was supported by the rumor that earnings of the corporation for the final 1913 quarter were better than has been supposed, and by the statement from Pittsburg that orders aggregating 100,000 tons have been received by mills in that district within a few days. One prominent manufacturers was quoted as saying that the rule is on the eve of one of the biggest buying movements in the history of the country.

TONE BECAME STEADY.

In the last half of the morning the tone of the market was steady and most active issues were quoted higher. Mexican Petroleum was one of the strongest stocks, advancing more than three points. Among railroads New York Central made a good gain. By noon time U. S. Rubber was nearly two points higher and there was a fractional gain for Amalgamated. American Can, Baltimore & Ohio, Canadian Pacific, Lehigh Valley, Katy, Missouri Pacific, Rock Island, Southern Pacific, Union Pacific and Westinghouse. A few prominent stocks showed small losses, but the list was higher as a whole. Steel had recovered nearly all of its Saturday loss.

COPPERS WERE HIGHER.

Coppers improved as group. American Smelting being up 1¾ by midday, when others were either unchanged or higher. They had been given support in London, although the market there was under pressure there. The strike at the Rio Tinto mine was settled today. There was no new development of importance in the metal market. In the London warrant market prices were lower during the morning, but a partial recovery marked the close. Electrolytic is quoted at 14½ cents a pound or better in Europe. Buying is still moderate in this country.

The New York money market showed no material change, and the call rate was around 2 per cent. for renewal of loans.

The United States Supreme court handed down no decision which affected the stock market.

FINANCIAL NEWS IN BRIEF.

The London copper warrants market was dull and lower at the opening and at noon spot was off 1s. 3d. and futures 7s. 6d. At the close spot had recovered 7s. 6d. and futures 2s. 6d.

Fact and Comment in Business World

By B. C. FORBES, Business Editor.

The civilized world was circled Saturday by paens of praise to democracy. All over the globe gatherings were held to commemorate the birth of Robert Burns, the most powerful preacher of democracy and the most deadly enemy of snobbery the eighteenth century produced. Burns, born in 1759, was of a truth an original democrat.

* * *

As I sat listening to learned speeches in laudation of the man who taught the world, in an age of caste and distinction, that "a man's a man for a' that," my mind, unbidden, dwelt upon the surprisings and conditions in this land of applied democracy.

And, ruminating, I wondered if we are not at present in danger, some of us, to carry "democracy" a trifle too far, and the pendulum threaten to swing to a harmfull extreme? Is the odd-time stoker dog, the working man, disposed to abuse his new position—shall I call it his new position of the upper dog? May he, being strong, forget to be merciful? Be prone to so act that his last state may become worse than his first?

* * *

Labor will find, as capital has found, that with what measure it metes, so it will be meted unto.

Fellow workers: Don' aspire to the exercise of tyranny. Don't seek to become a privileged class.

I mean, is he not in danger, unless wisely advised and guided, to embark on a course calculated to prove his own undoing, to turn what should be a blessing into a curse, to turn what should bring prosperity into an agency for adversity and depression?

SUNSHINE IN STEEL ORDERS HELPS 15,000

PITTSBURGH, Jan. 26. — Steel orders aggregating upward of 100,000 tons have been received by the mills of the Pittsburgh district and Colonel H. P. Bope, general sales manager of the Carnegie Steel Company, says that within ninety days the mills should be operating to full capacity.

Sustained prosperity, it is asserted among the captains of industry generally, will be a fact by that time. It is estimated that 15,000 workmen will be immediately affected by the latest favorable turn in steel mill developments.

"We are entering one of the biggest buying movements in the history of steel making in the United States and a long spell of normal, sound prosperity for the whole country," said Colonel Bope.

"The psychological moment for the complete resumption of full activity in all lines seems to have arrived. Big orders are already given or in contemplation in almost every branch of the steel business.

"Money has accumulated, and its possessors are said to be eager for investment outlets. Prices show a rising tendency and the great number of concerns that find it a necessity to restock are hurrying their requisitions in order to get their equipment before higher price marks are reached."

BANKER IS OPTIMISTIC.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 26.—"This country will take its proper position in international finance and a new era of financial education is dawning as a result of the enactment of the Federal Reserve law, according to Alexander J. Hemphill, president of the Guaranty Trust Company of New York, at a banquet here.

"The recent enactment of our Federal Reserve law is a recognition of the need for financial reform," said Mr. Hemphill. "While this law is not entirely satisfactory, it marks a great move forward.

"The machinery has been devised to make possible that this country take its proper place in international finance, and I think our bankers and legislators can be relied upon to put that machinery in shape to make it run smoothly.

"Just as soon as we begin more thoroughly to understand the international relationships we will commence to study the vast increases in governmental expenditures which are now occasioning such alarm to taxpayers and to bankers.

"The increasing demands for capital for non-producing purposes, for armaments and the like, will have to be checked, and thus a potent influence upon the world's peace will be exerted and bring about altruistic results through the recognition of economic financial principles."

The low price of bonds and the high rate obtainable on real estate mortgages made the year a good one for investments.

The passing of the Federal Income Tax was materially improved and policy-holders generally benefited by the intelligent response made to our letter to policy-holders, sent out last April. The united protest of policy-holders against unfair legislation is something that all legislatures, Federal and State, will have to reckon with in the future.

A statement consisting of 188 folio pages, giving in minute detail the transactions of the year, schedules of the Company's assets, and a vast deal of additional information, will be filed with the Department of Commerce in Washington, with the Government of each State (except one) of the United States, and with the Governments of all the leading Countries of the world. A brief of this, containing important details, will be sent to policy-holders during 1914, and will be mailed to any one on request.

January 8, 1914.

DARWIN P. KINGSLEY, President.

PREFERRED TO TAKE CHANCES

Man of Millions Who Conducted His Business as a Game of Chance.

The late John W. Gates was always ready and willing to make a wager on every question that came up at any time or place. He was familiarly known to his intimate acquaintances as "Bet-a-Million" Gates. A friend once referred to him as a born gambler. "Yes, I am," said Mr. Gates, "and so long as I win at least fifty-one per cent. of the time I'm going to continue to gamble." He made many millions of dollars in his various business enterprises, and it is said that he always referred to them as games of chance.

Since the days of old, life has ever been called a gamble. Small enterprises succeed and large ones fail; first we are up and then we go down. It is estimated that the great Panama Canal cost the enormous sum of $400,000,000. As a result of this mighty undertaking a book has been published, which under usual trade conditions would retail for $4. But a business chance caused the publishers to distribute this book through daily newspapers, and thus readers get it for the cost of distribution.

Clip the Panama certificate from another column of the AMERICAN today and you will learn that there is an element of gambling entering into the distribution price asked for this $4 volume. The only chance for you to lose is in not taking advantage of the offer. If the last chance to get some finds you without a copy you have lost. Look into it today.

Keep Radium Out of Reach of Monopoly

LONG suffering and tolerant as are the American people, a private monopoly of the only agency that promises a cure for cancer is more than they will patiently endure.

Evidence of an attempt to control the output of radium is sufficient reason for the government to seize and hold all radium-bearing lands. As well grant a charter to a wrecking company to patrol the coasts and charge from victims ten dollars apiece for rescue in difficulties as to permit greed to step in between the sufferers from this dreadful scourge and the new-born hope of rescue.

The records of one health department, that of New York, show that in 1913 there were 8,525 deaths from cancer, an increase of 291 over those of 1912 and of 861 over those of 1911.

With the disease progressing at such a fearful rate it takes on the nature of a catastrophe, in the face of which emergency methods become imperative.

Congress has already been informed by men whose word is unquestioned, by the most conservative scientists, that radium is the only known means of fighting the disease, and that there is solid basis for the belief that in many cases cancer can be eradicated by the mysterious emanations from the new element.

Perhaps, as yet, there is no absolute proof of the existence of a positive cure. But past experience demonstrates that the prospect of great gains will wither many a conscience, and if radium is not controlled by the government it will soon be controlled by private monopolists who will exact heavy tribute from rich victims of cancer and leave the poor victims to die the lingering death that always accompanies it.

Here is a real emergency. It is as much the duty of Congress to prevent a radium monopoly as it would be to prevent a monopoly of lifeboats in a flood like that which devastated Ohio last year.

The people of the country have endured a great deal in the way of private and uncontrolled monopoly of food and coal and ice, but their endurance has a well-defined limit, and it would be passed were Congress to make possible the grabbing of the radium supply by an avaricious corporation or collection of corporations.

The Port Directors Should Go Slow in Granting Light and Power Rights

The Edison Electric Light Company of Boston has asked the Board of Port Directors for authority to build a conduit for its electric wires to the property of the Commonwealth in control of the directors at Commonwealth Pier.

This is rather an extraordinary undertaking and would not be justified unless the Port Directors have determined to permit the Edison Electric Light Company to furnish the light and power upon the Commonwealth's wharf properties.

Such a determination involves a very serious consideration. The use of light and power would be considerable on these properties and much of the success of their development may depend upon the cost of light and power. Many of our large enterprises generally supply their own light and power. The Port Directors must not be less progressive than some of the leading merchants of Boston. The board already has a report from the electrical engineers which indicates that the directors would be able to supply all the electricity needed for the development and use of the properties at about one-half the price charged by the Electric Light Company.

Before any rights are given to the Edison Electric Light Company, the Port Directors ought to make a most careful investigation in order that they may not, as Governor Walsh said in his inaugural address, "CONFER UNDUE ADVANTAGE UPON THE POSSESSORS OF A SPECIAL PRIVILEGE ORIGINALLY GRANTED ONLY FOR THE PUBLIC INTEREST."

WHEN COMBINATION BECOMES MONOPOLY WHAT SHALL FIX PRICES?

Monopoly in the Sole Interest of Monopoly or Government in the Interests of the Whole Community?

By William Randolph Hearst

(From Hearst's Magazine, January, 1912.)

THE most difficult problem to approach in discussing the question of combination is the problem of the regulation of prices under monopoly.

It is obvious that combination is growing and extending in the direction of monopoly in almost every large line of business.

Monopolies are sometimes created by illegal coercive measures.

Monopolies are sometimes created for purposes of over-capitalization and speculation.

But even where monopolies are not created by coercive measures, or for speculative purposes, they gradually tend to form, because of the convincing and compelling economic advantages of combination and because of the necessity for complete co-operative organization to handle in the most systematic and effective manner the marvelous production of modern business.

There are stringent laws against trust coercion and oppression, and these laws should be enforced to the limit of their criminal penalties.

There should also be stringent Federal incorporation laws to prevent trust over-capitalization and wildcat speculation, and these laws should be strictly applied and enforced.

But after the enforcement of the criminal clauses of the Sherman act has prevented the formation of monopolies by coercion, and after an effective Federal incorporation act has prevented the formation of trusts for speculative and stock-jobbing purposes, what is going to be done with the monopolies that form naturally through general and rightful recognition of the advantages of combination?

TWO KINDS OF MONOPOLY.

A monopoly that is formed naturally and legitimately is just as much a monopoly as one that is formed unnaturally and improperly.

The only difference is, that a monopoly, has just as much power to control the market and extort high prices from the consuming public as the other.

The monopoly that is formed by genius, by persistent effort, by energy and enterprise, is just as much a monopoly as the one that is formed by force and fraud.

It may not be as hateful, but it is just as powerful.

It may not have been as destructive in its formation, but it is just as dangerous in its operation.

It may not have been as oppressive to its opponents and competitors, but it is likely to be just as extortionate in its dealings with the consuming public.

If it is a monopoly, no matter how formed, it possesses the power of monopoly; and, possessing the power of monopoly, and having the advantage of an exclusive market, it can put the prices of its products unreasonably low to discourage competition, or it can put them unreasonably high to extort unjust profits from the public.

Obviously, it can do both of these things; and, unregulated, unrestrained, uncontrolled, it obviously will do both of these things.

Both are unjust.

Both are injurious.

Both are against public policy.

Both must be considered and dealt with.

How are they to be dealt with?

REGULATION OF PRICES.

Of course, no one would for a moment consider government regulation of prices or profits if there were no necessity for considering such governmental action.

Of course, no one would advocate that government should interfere in business except where there is absolute necessity for government to interfere to protect the public.

But where there is absolute monopoly there IS such absolute necessity.

What else is possible? What else can be done?

Competition was wont formerly to regulate prices, although in an irregular and haphazard way; in a way that satisfied us, although unsatisfactorily because we then knew of no superior system.

Competition and the unrestricted law of supply and demand regulated prices, or rather controlled prices.

Prices, as a matter of fact, were not regulated.

They fluctuated, and they fluctuated from very low prices, ruinous to the producer when the product was plentiful, to very high prices, burdensome to the consumer when the product was scarce.

Natural competition regulates prices very much as natural rain supply waters crops.

Sometimes crops are drowned out because of too much water, and sometimes they are dried out because of too little water.

But now competition no longer regulates at all. The law of supply and demand does not control monopoly.

On the contrary, monopoly controls the supply, modifies the demand and regulates the price to suit its own requirements.

HOW MONOPOLY FIXES PRICES.

This regular or steady regulation of prices, even by monopoly, has some actual advantages despite its obvious disadvantages.

It has advantages to the producer, although not to the consumer.

It has advantages in the creation of wealth, although not in the distribution of wealth.

This system is at least a steadier one. Here is at least organization and orderliness.

Here the economic advantages of combination are operative, even though not justly and equably operative.

The consuming public, through the natural and inevitable selfishness of the promoters of combination, is debarred from sharing in the advantages of combination.

We have cheaper production, but not cheaper prices, and there is nothing to compel cheaper prices; not competition, for it no longer operates; not the law of supply and demand, that law has been repealed; not altruism, for in business altruism does not exist; not public opinion, for the motto of monopoly is "the public be damned."

EVASIONS OF THE ISSUE VAIN.

Then, WHAT?

Let us have the courage to face the problem honestly and to reach the legitimate conclusion.

There are various methods of evading the subject, one of which the Supreme Court has adopted. But all evasion is ineffective. Trickery is but a temporary subterfuge.

When a problem is acute and actual, the solution must be genuine and final.

If the evils of monopoly are to be eliminated there are only two effective ways:

One way is to destroy the evil, and with it the monopoly which creates that evil.

The other way is to separate the evil from the monopoly and destroy only the evil.

One way is to prevent combination, and the other way is to permit combination, but prevent extortion.

One way is to try to compel business to compete against its will and contrary to its advantage, and the other way is to allow business to combine and to obtain the full advantage of combination, while compelling it to share that advantage with the public.

When considering the various alternative of destroying combination we must weigh carefully the two most vital reasons for not destroying it or attempting to destroy it.

One of these is the convincing reason against substituting an inferior method of production for a superior one, against compelling a wasteful and cumbersome method to be employed in place of an efficient and economical one.

The other reason is the impossibility of doing anything so contrary to nature and to natural development, so opposed to universal advantage and advancement.

How can we benefit by replacing organization with disorganization, system with disorder, harmonious co-operation with conflicting individual effort?

A faculty for organization is a measure of mental development.

A capacity for systematic effort is an evidence of business ability.

Combination is the expression of greater experience, better knowledge, and higher intelligence, the result of education, the effect of gradual appreciation of certain fundamental principles and the transmission of those principles into practical operation.

Combination means economy. Combination means efficiency. Combination means system and simplicity, the elimination of unnecessary cogs in the business machinery.

Combination means increased production and decreased effort. Combination means stability, permanence, confidence, certainty, and every able business man knows it.

COMBINATION IS INEVITABLE.

As a consequence the Big Business of the country will positively be conducted in combination, either open or secret.

If government persecutes combination, it will make combination secret.

If government recognizes and allows combination, it will make combination public.

If combination is public, it can be regulated and controlled in the interest of the public.

The inevitable, unavoidable, inescapable conclusion is that combination should be permitted, should be compelled to be public, and should be regulated in the interest of the public.

Then how is it to be regulated, and what is to regulate it?

Not combination itself, because combination will not regulate itself unselfishly; not the public, as a body, for the public has not the knowledge or organization to do it, but the government, the common representative of both the consuming public and the business interests.

Whenever business demands from government the right to combine, then business must concede to the government the power to impose conditions that will compel combination to operate for the public good.

If the combination constitutes a merger or monopoly extensive enough and powerful enough to fix prices, then the government must require that the prices fixed shall not be unreasonable or to the detriment of the public.

Thus the advantages of combination will be secured, not only for the producer, but for the consumer.

Thus cheaper production will mean cheaper prices; thus the advantages of combination will become general, for the public will receive its fair share of them; thus combination itself will become popular, for it will mean not a burden upon the public, but a benefit to the public.

ELIMINATING PROFITS DANGEROUS.

I have discussed here the regulation of prices rather than the limitation of profits, because the two are but different forms of the same proposition.

The limitation of profits is as advanced a step as the regulation of prices, but not as practical a process.

The regulation of prices in no way interferes with or discourages economy or efficiency of operation, compactness of organization or any of those business advantages to which combination exists and is to be allowed to exist.

On the other hand, limitation of profits removes the main incentive to economy and efficiency.

If business (no matter how economically and efficiently it may be conducted) is limited in its profits, then, inevitably, less attention will be paid to the economy and efficiency that make for cheaper production and cheaper prices.

But if business be merely restrained from charging an exorbitant price for its products and allowed to appropriate as profits all that can be created within that price of economy and efficiency, then economy and efficiency will be maintained at the highest degree of perfection and the full advantage of combination will be developed and secured.

The regulation of prices, then, secures for business a larger opportunity and for the public a greater and more definite benefit.

Inasmuch as the regulation of prices is merely an enlargement of powers already possessed by the government, it would be well, in providing for the regulation of prices, to adhere as closely as possible to the means and machinery already employed by the government.

The regulation of prices is merely an extension of the idea involved in the regulation of railroad rates.

The regulation of the charges of monopolies created by the government is merely extended to include the regulation of the charges of other monopolies equally powerful and equally important to the public welfare.

The Interstate Commerce Commission is empowered to fix railroad rates.

A sufficient enlargement of the number and a sufficient extension of the powers of that commission would form a body able and fitted to deal with the problem of more general rate or price regulation.

When a member of Congress I introduced bills giving the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to fix railroad rates, creating the Interstate Commerce Court and proposing a Federal Incorporation act.

An elaboration of the machinery necessary to perform these recognized functions of government would be sufficient to enable the government to perform without derangement or difficulty the enlarged functions involved in the control of combination and the regulation of prices.

HOW TO DO IT.

The Department of Commerce and Labor, with its agents appointed from every State and representing it in every State, as provided for in the Hearst Federal Incorporation bill, would possess in its records all the facts relating to the size, character and condition of every Federal corporation.

The Interstate Commerce Commission, increased in numbers and divided into various departments, would deal with extortionate charges and monopolistic abuses in various lines of business.

The Interstate Commerce Court, increased, if necessary, in numbers and divided into divisions, would review and enforce the findings of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

I would add to my original Commerce Court bill, however, a clause providing that the justices of this court be appointed for twelve-year terms, and that one-third of these justices end their terms during every Presidential term of four years.

The object of this provision is to allow the President, as the chief elected representative of all the people, largely to alter the character and complexion of the Commerce Court during his term of office, in conformity with the principles and purposes entertained by the citizens at the time of his election.

In two Presidential terms, the character and complexion of the Commerce Court could be completely altered fully to harmonize with the principles and purposes of the people as expressed by the successive elected representative of the people.

In these days of insolent assumption of legislative functions by the courts, some such provision is necessary to restrain their arbitrary appropriation of power, and such a provision might indeed be applied by a constitutional amendment to the Supreme Court of the United States, if unconstitutional assumption should make further constitutional restraint necessary.

THE RESULT.

Any systematization and organization and reasonable regulation of business along these lines would be a boon to business.

It would replace disorder and disorganization with order and organization.

It would replace uncertainty with certainty.

It would replace perplexity and confusion with definite knowledge, and, finally, it would replace ignorant, irregular attack with intelligent, systematic regulation.

Business would prosper, not only because of such assured conditions, but also because of the fullest freedom to adopt combination and modern methods conducive to cheaper production.

The public should be equally benefited, for they would participate in the prosperity and get the benefit of cheaper products in cheaper prices.

Under such a scientific system of combination, brought to a pitch of highest efficiency, the greatest amount of wealth would be created; and under reasonable regulation by government the division of wealth would be just and equable, and impartially advantageous to all.

Help This Hospital

What more worthy object of our generosity than a splendid hospital located on the brow of a hill, where Nature combines with science to aid the sick. Such a hospital St. Elizabeth's will be.

Those who are responsible for St. Elizabeth's wish to raise $200,000 in a few days. They can do it if we will take a little off some pleasure we contemplate and give it to this hospital.

Whoever is disposed to help this fine cause should send contribution promptly. Many a good intention is lost by procrastination.

Act now while the spirit prompts you.

Love Letters

By ELBERT HUBBARD

THE reformers tell us this country needs this, that and the other to save it from dire dissolution. These things are true or not, as the case may be, but to my mind the one vital thing needed in America is an increase in the 'Gene Field Letter.

We are suffering from epistolary elephantiasis.

Every college should have a 'Gene Field Chair. Very few folks know how to write a letter, what to say or when to stop.

A 'Gene Field Letter always contains an element of joy.

Next, it bears a message of wisdom.

Third, it has a jigger of wit that gives the wisdom flavor.

Fourth, it closes when it is done, and there is no postscript.

A 'Gene Field Letter breathes kindness, appreciation, friendship, love truth. The owner clings to it, shows it to friends, preserves it. If you own an original, you'll not part with it any more than you would sell your mother's portrait.

* * *

'GENE FIELD may not have been a great man, but he had a great heart. He knew the secret of friendship. To live so you will love and be loved is a fine art. Field was a friend.

Now let the world learn at his feet and follow his example.

The age demands it. A long letter robs you of time and thus shortens your life. A vacuous news-letter does the same.

A long letter of counsel and advice tends to make us do that which we ought not.

The missive that contains a grain of good hidden in six bushels of wordy chaff tires eyesight and temper, turning the milk of human kindness to bonny-clabber.

Sensible people do not go around putting everything up at stralicht. Things will not stay put, anyway, unless it is their nature to do so.

'Gene Field never called you down. He always called you up—out of the mire of selfishness and dependency, up into the sunlight.

On the Rialto, where manuscripts and autographs of the great and proud are sold, 'Gene Field—like Abou Ben Adhem—leads all the rest. 'Gene was not as profound as Emerson, not as learned as Gresley, not as flowery as Longfellow, but his letters today command a price that those of the good men just named do not.

When 'Gene wrote a letter he always made the recipient pleased with himself, and being pleased with himself, he was pleased with 'Gene and everybody. He put you for the moment en rapport with the world.

* * *

NEVER write a grouchy letter—telephone. The grouchy word passes, and if you write in the mood it is fixed, and only the charming should be perpetuated.

A 'Gene Field Letter is always brief. It is a letter-gram of love.

It is written with the exquisite care that tokens deep respect. 'Gene wrote copper-plate, getting the idea from Thackeray, and of all letter writers, Colonel Newcombe alone surpasses our 'Gene Field.

Of all living men, no writer's letters are so valuable as those of James Whitcomb Riley. Jim may say foolish things, but he never writes them. Riley's letters are like bunches of violets, with the morning dew on them. Jim caught the idea from 'Gene.

To All Who Love Winter

By LILIAN LAUFERTY

'TIS the Winter wind, the cold wind, a-blowing down the street,
It paints the cheek with stolen blood of stamping, chilling feet;
Old Winter's ice-tipped javelins each do their frozen part
To chill your head and body, and to try to reach your heart.

'Tis I would meet the Winter blast and greet it with a smile
'Tis tingling blood and glowing eyes would bid it stay awhile;
While Spring is climbing up the year where gentler breezes dart,
'Tis the whirling wind of Winter that is ruler of my heart.

'Tis the Winter wind, the north wind, a-racing through the air,
It storms and shrieks and eddies from its cold and olden lair,
When it sets your blood a-stinging and it bids the ice-tears start,
Though it lash and freeze your body, still the North wind warms your heart.

Questions Answered

C. J. R.—The "Primrose League" was formed in 1884, in memory of the late Lord Beaconsfield, whose favorite flower the primrose is thought to have been. Beaconsfield died on April 19, 1881, and the anniversary of that day is termed "Primrose Day," when the flower is generally worn by his admirers and also placed upon his statue in Parliament Square. The joke of it is, the primrose was not the great statesman's favorite flower. It was, however, the favorite flower of Queen Victoria, and when asked about the floral tribute to be sent to Beaconsfield's funeral, she advised sending "the primrose, my favorite flower." In some way the matter got mixed up, and the delusion sprang up that materialised in the "Primrose League."

T. C. H.—It has been definitely proven that the disease known as "malaria" is caused by the bite of the mosquito of the genus called Anopheles Claviger. The destruction of the mosquito, therefore, carries along with it the destruction of malaria. There is not much doubt that sooner or later science will hit upon the ways and means of completely exterminating the pestiferous insect which is responsible for so much loss to humanity.

A. C. F.—Yes, there is a very pronounced distinction between the Pilgrims and the Puritans. The Pilgrims were the seventy-eight men and twenty-eight women (members of John Robinson's Church) who sailed in the Mayflower from Leyden and landed at Plymouth, where they founded the first English colony in New England. The Puritans came a few years later and founded Boston, or the "Massachusetts Bay Company."

Women, the Income Tax and the Vote

By REV. CHARLES F. AKED, D. D., LL. D.

THE militant madness has bitten that good anti-militant, Anna Shaw.

All America admires Anna Shaw. Everybody who knows her respects her. She has united great ability with fine character and unswervingly consistent devotion to great ideals. And it is to be hoped that she will think better of her published resolve to refuse compliance with the demands made upon her by the new income tax law. If she persists in her determination to offer "passive resistance," then American women ought to turn a deaf ear to her appeal to "go and do likewise."

Dr. Shaw will refuse—so the report goes—to fill in the schedule and render the accounts asked by the collectors. Presumably, she will refuse to pay the amount of the tax arbitrarily levied. And, if need be, she will go to prison for her countumacy.

Dr. Shaw's example should be repudiated by suffragists throughout the United States on two grounds. First, because such a course will do little good; second, because it may do great harm.

Votes are needed, the votes of men. Before men give their votes their opinions must be changed by the course on which Dr. Shaw has resolved?

For the purpose of the inquiry we may divide the opponents of woman suffrage into the thoughtful and the unthoughtful—not necessarily the "educated" and the "ignorant" vote, though it is more than ever necessary correspond to these distinctions.

The unthoughtful vote is twice as large as the thoughtful vote, and it is made up partly of the honest, but unconvinced, un-Americanized immigrant and partly of the blackguardly elements of the community.

Is there anything in Dr. Shaw's policy which will convince and convert these unthoughtful persons? A little there may be, but very little, and as little that one should be very reluctant to incur the risks involved in the policy for the purpose of securing that trifling gain.

Is there anything in Dr. Shaw's policy which will change the convictions of educated and thoughtful American citizens who have discussed the question with themselves and with their friends and have decided to vote "No"? Clearly not; the spectacular presentation in the courts and from the prison of the formula, "Taxation without representation is tyranny" will not succeed where quiet argument has failed.

The immigrant is the real difficulty. Five years are not enough. He cannot become an American in so short a time. If he has come from a country where for uncounted centuries a woman has been a beast of burden; where he has harnessed her in a cart, yoked her to a plow, compelled her to bear his children, and of his sovereign grace permitted her to cook his meals, he cannot become an American, accepting the American views of woman and learning the American attitude toward women, in five years.

* * *

The nobles of American women, women who have contributed and whose ancestors have contributed to the greatness of America, and highly cultivated women, physicians, lawyers, professors of colleges, teachers in the schools, all the hosts of charming, graceful American girls, the beauty and glory of our cities—all these must stand before the "new citizen" begging for the vote!

Meanwhile, other such prospective citizens are being poured upon our shores, a million a year, or there-abouts; and they, too, have to be Americanized and convinced!

It is an endless and a heartbreaking task. But it has to be done. It is being done. The good work goes on. Suffrage is coming. It is coming fast. Every State in the Union. Men who are no longer young may live to see it. And it will be a ghastly disappointment, a hideous wrong, if a mistaken policy, inaugurated by so wise and brave a leader as Dr. Shaw, should make the work still more difficult and put back the day of final victory.

In-Shoots

Things come to those who wait—and also to those who do not dodge.

Most of us can always see opportunity pounding the panels out of the other fellow's door.

We always feel disappointed when bumping up against genius that has had a recent hair cut.

It is not dangerous to tell the truth when you are addressing persons deserving of compliments.

Famous Retreat of Sir John Moore

By REV. T. B. GREGORY

IT was one hundred and five years ago this month that Sir John Moore died mortally wounded at Corunna, to be buried that night by his grief-stricken comrades and "left alone with his glory."

As has been well said, Sir John holds a unique place in English military history, being the "only British general who has gained everlasting fame by the conduct of a retreat."

In November, 1808, Moore was ordered to Spain to help stem the tide of French success in that country, and the 13th of the month found him concentrated at Salamanca, where he was forced to remain inactive, watching the triumphant successes of Napoleon and Soult. About the middle of December Moore began his famous "retreat" from Salamanca to Corunna. To many what that retreat was, and why it was that it made Moore's name immortal in British annals, one needs but to read the account of it in Napier's "Peninsular War," which pictures in detail all the "finest pieces of military history in the English language."

But the account could not have been so fine unless the retreat itself had been fine. Early in December Moore was fighting every day with the French, who pressed upon him, and never once did he lose either his courage or his head. As often as he was attacked he beat back the enemy, and finally reached Corunna, where he hoped to connect with the fleet. But the fleet was not there, and Sir John, right after his exhaustive march with its constant fighting, was obliged to join battle with Soult. The determined assault of the French marshal was handsomely repulsed, and in the mean, at the victory Moore received the wound that killed him.

Building a Better Race of Children

By DR. D. A. SARGENT

Of Harvard University

CONSIDERING a few of the causes generally conceded to be potent factors in the declining birth rate in most civilized countries, we come to the conclusion that the trouble is largely a conflict between individual instincts and abilities and racial needs. This conflict may be variously expressed as poverty, or the inability of the individual to make headway against the many; selfishness, or the unwillingness to assume the responsibility of rearing and maintaining life; indifference, preference for other occupations or conscious abstinence from marriage through the lack of physical fitness.

Some of the reasons which are brought forward in defence of a marriage resulting in few children are unfortunately justifiable in the light of our social and economic conditions. It rests with thinkers and workers along these lines to solve this side of the problem through such movements as mothers' pensions and all such agencies which centre about child welfare.

And it rests first with parents themselves, then with all teachers and preachers to so present and exemplify the ethical significance of family life that youth will gravitate toward high and pure ideals.

* * *

It is proper to consider those physical conditions which have in the past produced and maintained superior races and to try to point out the necessity of reconstructing an age of physical idealism, so to speak, which shall help to reunite the inclinations of the individual and the claims of the race.

The present tendency of the superior races and individuals to diminish in number is contrary to the accepted theory of the "survival of the fittest," as that law is worked out under natural conditions of plant and animal life. Here it is the most perfect specimens of tribe and race, the strongest and most well adapted, who become, as is desirable, the progenitors of the future race. But when applied to man, these physical principles of the "survival of the fittest" through the struggle for existence have been forced into the background because of man's mental, social and sympathetic development."

* * *

It is the province of the physical educator not only to invigorate the individual for himself, but through him to improve the race. That is, physical education offers at least one constructive solution of the problem of race betterment.

Long experience and careful observation have shown us that physical education in its broad and broadest sense is one of the most important factors in the betterment of the race. Through improving the structure and function of various parts of the human organism, it so harmonizes the nervous processes that super-sensitiveness is allayed by motor activity and power and efficiency are developed through habits of health.

Above all, through this individual improvement in the physical condition of men and women there results a better trace of children, so that we may consider physical education an agent in our modern sciences of euthenics and eugenics.
